Air Engineering Development Division (USAF)

BY MAJ. GEN. FRANKLIN O. CARROLL,
USAF

Commanding General

AN earnest need for advanced aircraft engineering testing facilities by both the Armed Forces and the aircraft industry induced Gen. H. H. Arnold to take investigative steps as long ago as 1944, selecting one of the world's leading aerodynamicists, Dr. Theodore von Karman, to check into German successes soon after the end of World War II. This action has resulted in today's intensive construction at Tullahoma, Tennessee, of an air research center which bears his name.

Maj. Gen. Carroll

The Arnold Engineering Development Center is at present witnessing its peak construction period. Following the tedious processes leading up to the commencement of such a program, basic utilities and the first of three major testing facilities are now under actual construction. Thus far, the program involves $157,500,000 authorized and appropriated for construction purposes.

With the mission of designing, constructing and operating the Arnold Center, the Air Engineering Development Division was activated on 1 January 1950 by the Chief of Staff, USAF. Headquarters of the AEDD are presently located at commercially-owned William Northern Field, a wartime AAF base at Tullahoma, about ten miles from the construction site. Though small in number, about 250 strong, its staff is functioning with a combined viewpoint of pushing construction towards operational status.

A visitor to the Arnold Center construction site would discover a transformation in progress on a remote and rugged portion of the old Camp Forrest reservation near Tullahoma (a small city of 7,500 about half-way between Nashville and Chattanooga). Workmen are busy in various stages of construction, from excavation for foundations to actual brick-laying and steel erection. Civil contractors are undertaking construction of the Center, with the Army's Corps of Engineers, through a specially organized Tullahoma Engineer District, exercising direct supervision, with the Air Engineering Development Division maintaining over-all supervision of the vast project.

Well along in its construction is the first priority high altitude engine test facility, scheduled for its shakedown opera-

Senate Reports USN Personnel Changes

The Senate Armed Services Committee this week reported favorably on the Navy Department's bill to retain in active service twice passed over junior officers, who otherwise would be discharged, and to make permanent the present interim authority for temporary promotions in the Navy and Marine Corps.

The Committee, however, recommended that the Navy's bill be amended to provide that officers to be retained under the proposed law be again considered by a selection board with a view to discharging those whose records indicate unsatisfactory performance of duty in their present grades or that they would not satisfactorily perform the duties of a higher grade.

So insistent was the committee on the inclusion of its amendment, that the committee report, submitted by Senator John C. Stennis (D-Miss), concluded with the unusual statement that if the amendment is not included the committee "would not recommend favorable consideration of the bill."

The committee's report as filed with the Senate also recommends another amendment to the bill. This would insert a new section in the Act of 24 July 1941 which would give the right to retirement in highest grade, with retired pay based on such grade, to officers retiring prior to 1 Jan. 1957. This is considered particularly important now that the Navy is resuming temporary promotions in the lower grades. However, there was some

AF Temporary Promotions

Air Force officials reported this week the likelihood that there would be no additional temporary promotion program for officers prior to the beginning of the fiscal year on 1 July.

It was stated, however, that the temporary promotion program is in the final stages of planning preparations to take effect this Summer.

General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, USAF Chief of Staff, is expected to announce planning recommendations in the near future.

Marine Corps Bill Passed by Senate

The bill to enlarge the U. S. Marine Corps and to make its Commandant a consultant to the Joint Chiefs of Staff was approved by the Senate on 4 May without a dissenting vote.

The bill was reached on the Senate calendar only two days after it had been unanimously reported out by the Senate Committee on Armed Services.

Inasmuch as Representative Carl Vinson (D-Ga.), chairman of the House Committee on Armed Services, has long been a staunch supporter of a similar bill, there is little doubt but that his committee will give early consideration to the measure. House support seems assured. However, some believe that the President may veto the measure, although the fact that the bill was modified from its original form and does not make the Marine Corps Commandant a full-fledged mem-

Bill Would Tie Pay To Cost Of Living

Legislation which would tie active and retired military pay to the Cost of Living Index—now 9 per cent higher than when the Career Compensation Act was passed—was introduced in Congress this week by Representative James E. Van Zandt (R-Pa.), a member of the House Armed Services Committee.

Meantime, reports persisted that a pay increase for military personnel would be linked to the proposed across-the-board pay boost for the Government's civilian employees.

However, on Capitol Hill there is continuing delay regarding the proposed omnibus bill of amendments to the Career Compensation Act, promised by Representative Paul Kilday (D-Tex) earlier in the session. It is known that the protracted action on manpower legislation has held up progress on Mr. Kilday's measure, which has precluded consideration of an overall pay boost, in addition to amendments to remove inequities. Among the Congressmen who have declared themselves in favor of a pay raise for military personnel is Representative Pat Sutton (D-Tenn), who has told THE JOURNAL of discussions with Mr. Kilday on this matter.

Representative Van Zandt has called for "immediate consideration" of his bill, H.R. 3991, to adjust military pay to increases in the Cost of Living Index "so that those men and women who serve in our Armed Forces will be given the same consideration as accorded those who work in private industry."

In analyzing Congressman Van Zandt's proposal, it is significant to note that at the time the Career Compensation Act was before Congress, the base pay of officers, as recommended by the Hook Commission to make military pay comparable to civilian pay, was cut 5 per cent.

Seemingly, this reduction should be compensated for before military pay is tied exclusively to the Cost of Living Index, in order that the present inequity may be removed and not be extended indefinitely.

There was no word late this week as to when the House Armed Services Committee would begin hearings on pay legislation, but it is certain that Mr. Van Zandt will press for early action.

He noted that the Cost of Living Index has gone up 9 per cent since August 1949, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, but emphasized that because of housing shortages and frequent transfers the cost of living for military personnel has gone up relatively more than for civilian workers.

This point has been stressed repeatedly in recent articles published in THE JOURNAL discussing the need for an immediate pay raise.

Congressman Van Zandt said also that the 15 to 18 per cent increase in income

Washington Daily News—"If it was to be our policy to avoid a clash with Russia at all costs we should have stayed out of Korea when the war started. The danger of Soviet intervention is no more real now than it was last June. . . . We can't stop Communism by running away from Russia. If the present policy of maneuver is intended to buy time until we are ready for a showdown, we would be wise to pick our spots in the interim, pass up any 'police actions' which are likely to blossom into full-blown wars, and make better use of the purchased time by speeding up our preparedness effort."

New York Herald Tribune—"The three-day questioning of General Douglas MacArthur will probably stand as one of the most striking instances of this form of legislative process in American history. It was not only a feat of intellectual and physical endurance on the part of the general, but a convincing demonstration of the clarity and vigor of his own concept of strategy—within the strict limitations he has imposed upon himself and his questioners. . . . But the basic issue still stands: does General MacArthur's course offer advantages commensurate with the dangers it entails? The isolation of America would be a heavy price to pay, even for success in Korea. An isolated America, wasting men and substance on an inconclusive land, air and naval war on the fringes of China would represent a monumental catastrophe."

New York Times—"Now that both General MacArthur and the administration have presented the main outlines of their respective arguments in the debate precipitated by the general's dismissal, it is increasingly evident that the areas of agreement between them are far greater than the areas of disagreement. . . . When the acrimony and the arguments over the detailed issues of the present controversy begin to subside it is more than likely that the broader agreements established by the present debate will prove to be both the lasting results and the justification of it."

Washington Evening Star—"Because we have been fools in recent years, because we have recklessly neglected our military arm despite the clearly revealed hostile intentions of the Russians, it may be necessary to ask American boys to give up their lives in Korea while we retrieve our blunders. But if this is the case, if this is true, we should be striving day and night to close the gap, to make up the lost ground in the arms race."

Boston Post—"General MacArthur seems to have accepted in his own mind that in taking his case to the people he had destroyed his usefulness to the Nation as a military commander, and now undertakes to persuade the Nation out of patriotism that we are embarked on the wrong course. The tragic consequences of this rift in public opinion and solidarity of effort is yet to be reckoned."

Minneapolis Tribune—"MacArthur utters his criticisms and offers his solutions with such an air of absolute authority that many are disposed to accept them as gospel truths. Whatever a man of MacArthur's brilliance and long experience says is worth considering carefully. He is, however, a human being and all humans, MacArthur and the Tribune's editors not excepted, are subject to error. His views and ours need to be checked against other views just like everyone else's. The risks are too great to warrant taking chances by hasty adoption of any policies, however categorically and persuasively propounded."

Boston Traveller—"One thing has become crystal clear even at this early stage in the MacArthur hearings—the United Nations did not provide that degree of support for the Korean War which was morally and practically required by its own undertaking."

THE WAR IN KOREA

THE lull in the ground fighting in Korea, which followed the short-lived Red offensive of late last month, continued this week, with operations marked by relatively minor patrol clashes and cautious advances by United Nations forces. Almost two-thirds of the ground lost to the Communist offensive, which began on 22 April, has now been regained by the Allies.

A spectacular Allied air strike last Wednesday, 9 May, the largest of the Korean war, ripped up a new Red air base at Sinuiju, in Northwest Korea, just across the Yalu River from Manchuria. Some 312 Allied jet fighters and fighter-bombers participated, 100 flying protective cover, and the remainder attacking the field with high explosives, incendiaries, jellied gasoline, machine guns and rockets.

There were undetermined numbers of Red jet planes on the ground at the new field, and at least one of them was destroyed and others were damaged in the raid. Facilities at the field were knocked out and the runways cratered, rendering the installation completely unserviceable. Heavy casualties were inflicted on enemy troops at the field. Flames and heavy smoke made complete assessment of the damage impossible.

Across the river at Antung in Manchuria about 80 jet planes were observed on a Chinese Red field. Of these, about 50 took the air during the raid, but only 15 crossed the river to engage the Allied planes. In ensuing encounters, two Red fighters were damaged and one American plane was hit, but managed to reach its home base in safety.

While ground combat was limited to local skirmishes during the week, the enemy was making strenuous efforts to resupply and reinforce the Red troops which were severely battered during the first week of the Communist spring offensive. Air observers reported thousands of enemy vehicles congesting the principal highways leading to the front. In a 7-day period, ending this week, it is estimated that 16,000 enemy vehicles of all types, including heavy trucks and small ox carts, were sighted, two-thirds of them moving south. However, late this week this was a marked decline in enemy truck movements.

The extremely heavy vehicular traffic during most of the week indicates the determination of the enemy to renew the offensive just as soon as logistical support can be provided. Continuous round-the-clock Allied air attacks on truck convoys and other supply movements are greatly hampering, but not entirely preventing needed ammunition and other materials from reaching Red troops at the front.

Casualties inflicted on the enemy by ground and air attacks continue to be heavy, though far less than during the hard fighting of two or three weeks ago.

It is estimated that enemy personnel losses since the start of the Red offensive three weeks ago exceed 80,000. Among the enemy units hit the hardest were fresh and well-trained Chinese Communist divisions, only recently committed to battle.

Intelligence reports from various sources indicate the possibility of a sharp drop in Red morale, due both to the heavy losses sustained, and to resentment toward the Russians for failure to supply air and armor to support the spring drive of the Communists. Prisoners captured by the Allies a month ago correctly fixed the time of the offensive, and also said that they had been told that sufficient aircraft and tanks would be provided by the Russians to assure success of the operation.

High-ranking Chinese Red officers are now represented as believing that the recent assault on Allied lines would have been completely successful, if tanks and planes had been available to exploit the breakthrough achieved in the initial fighting. Apparently they had been led to believe that these were to be forthcoming from Soviet sources.

At the start of the conflict the North Koreans were well equipped with Russian tanks and artillery, but battle losses of these items were not replaced. Chinese Reds, intervening in Korea, have lacked artillery and armor, and operations of Russian-type jet planes have been limited to a relatively narrow belt along the Manchurian border.

In the ground fighting this week, operations were marked by limited enemy withdrawals in almost all sectors, but there are no indications of any general retreat. On the contrary, it appears evident that a heavy build-up of Red troops and supplies is in progress a few miles south of the 38th parallel, in obvious preparation for a renewed assault, that will open the second phase of the spring offensive.

During the week the initiative was with Allied ground troops, which sent aggressive patrols deep into enemy-held territory to maintain contact, and to uncover Red troop concentrations and dispositions. These patrols engaged in numerous minor firefights with enemy outposts and screening detachments in company and battalion size.

At its deepest point of penetration the enemy offensive achieved gains up to 30 miles, but after the attack was stopped the Reds withdrew from 12 to 15 miles along most of the front, losing about two-thirds of the territory previously won. Local Allied counter-attacks have pushed north of Munsan, 25 miles from Seoul, on the western end of the line, and beyond the key town of Chunchon on the central front. The Reds were apparently content to remain on the defensive throughout the week.

In the western sector, South Korean troops reported the entire Kimpo peninsula clear of Reds. The South Koreans exchanged mortar fire with the enemy across the Han River, and also sent small patrols over the river to probe enemy positions south of Kaesong, 35 miles northwest of Seoul, and within two miles of the 38th parallel. The purpose of this operation is to protect the western flank of the Allied line from possible envelopment by a North Korean corps known to be in this general area.

There were several brisk actions northwest of Seoul along the road to Munsan. Reds employed mortars, anti-tank guns, automatic weapons and mines to delay the Allied advance in this sector.

Scattered enemy contact and some mines were encountered by United Nations forces in the area north of Uijongbu, from 12 to 15 miles from Seoul. Little or no enemy contact was reported in the area immediately northeast of Seoul, where two weeks ago strong enemy forces threatened to outflank the capital.

Light, scattered enemy resistance was met by Allied forces patrolling the central front. United Nations units entered Chunchon, a former Red stronghold, without encountering the enemy. This city is 45 miles northeast of Seoul and eight miles south of the 38th parallel.

East of Chunchon, however, an Allied patrol was ambushed and cut off, but it successfully broke out and fought its way back to the United Nations line. Around Kapyong, between Chunchon and Seoul, there were several brief and inconclusive skirmishes between small units.

In the area east of Inje, 75 miles northeast of Seoul and four miles north of the 38th parallel, moderate enemy resistance resulted in stiff fighting, in the course of which Allied troops made limited gains.

On the east coast South Korean troops, supported by Naval gunfire, advanced 20 miles, recapturing the coast town of Kamsong without a fight.

The 1st Battalion of the Gloucestershire Regiment and C Troop of the 170th Heavy Mortar Battery, of the 29th British Brigade, were awarded the Presidential Distinguished Unit Citation this week for conspicuous gallantry in action. The decoration was in recognition of the heroic stand made by these units during the first three days of the Communist spring offensive.

Defending a critical position south of the Imjin River, these organizations were attacked by the 63d Chinese Communist Army, and surrounded by tremendous numbers of Reds. The British soldiers held their position tenaciously, and fought with great courage for three days, giving other units of the I Corps the necessary time to regroup and block the further advance of the enemy. Most of the men of these two British units were casualties.

The Presidential Citation was presented by Lt. Gen. James A. Van Fleet, Commanding the American Eighth Army, who spoke with emotion of the brilliant service rendered the Allied cause by the heroism of the British soldiers.

THE EUROPEAN COMMAND

IMPLEMENTING of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's planning took another modest, but significant, step forward on Monday, when Brig. Gen. Edward J. McGaw, USA, and 200 officers and men moved into Reykjavik as the first element of a new garrison in Iceland for the defense of the west. It is of passing interest that in a very modern manner they arrived by air. Land, sea, and air are already represented on an initially small scale, and it is reasonable to expect in the future a basis (if not a full readiness) for performance comparable to that of Maj. Gen. C. Hartwell Bonesteel's command in World War II.

This 1941-1945 performance was threefold: Iceland (already garrisoned since early in the war by British defense forces) soon became a useful staging base on the North Atlantic air shuttle, it was a bastion for the aerial protection of our North Atlantic surface convoys, and in its strictly aggressive aspects it was a solid base for continuous patrol and attack against enemy raiders. To these three continuing missions in the event of another war (or its prevention) a fourth readily suggests itself by reason of airpower's development during the past decade; this mid-ocean base can provide essential aid to our long-range aerial bombers, both as a secure base for landing and take-off and repair, and as a means of providing mid-air refueling en route.

One of NATO Nations

Geographically and functionally, Iceland is far from the European continent and hence, while it is one of the 12 NATO nations, it does not appropriately fall under General Eisenhower's Supreme Headquarters, Allied Powers in Europe. It is, rather, in the North Atlantic area (where Portugal also has been assigned) and therefore is under that other NATO command whose commander, scope, and assigned forces alike are still to be designated. For the set-up of the projected North Atlantic Area Command and the Mediterranean Area Command, both coordinate with General Eisenhower's SHAPE, is still not precisely determined, and hence not announceable. It therefore is in his long-standing capacity as Commander in Chief, Atlantic, that Admiral William M. Fechteler, USN, has been given authority over the Iceland task force which General McGaw heads.

Monday's operation, in itself as it arouses interest by reason of its timing. The Senate joint committees' hearings on the Far East issues (which a fortnight ago promised to embarrass considerably the western nations' whole anti-Communist program) are in full cry. The North Atlantic Area of NATO is still undetermined. So is the Mediterranean Area, and this may well call for another treaty altogether, supplementing NATO's so as to include several non-NATO powers. (Continued on Next Page) ers and thus permit fuller development of anti-Communist resources in that strategically vital area. The British parliamentary battle continues. France is still a little out-of-breath from its settlement of the troublesome reforms in the proportional vote system (so as to permit squeezing out a number of the Communist legislators), and now approaches the ticklish business of a 17 June general election. Middle Europe has its perennial troubles. But ignoring all these alarms and excursions, NATO calmly goes ahead with the initial establishment of an extremely important bastion on a spot where until last Monday there was neither soldier, sailor, marine, or airman. Iceland has none of these, and offers none. But, as in its 1941 tender to the United States, it now has offered to NATO a contribution which is potentially very large.

Greenland's facilities, likewise assured us by last week's negotiations with Denmark, also can be considerable, for it will be remembered that Greenland, once rejected, became during World War II an important stage in our aerial shuttle service; we now seem likely to have the North Atlantic's standing defenses in better shape than in 1941.

Perhaps in America's own excitement over spectacular events at Washington there has been too much fear over international consequences. Certainly it is comforting to look across either ocean, in one direction to observe the high success which General Ridgway's Far East forces continue to attain in Korea, and in the other to vision the calm and methodical plodding along of our activities and plans in Europe. General Eisenhower this past week has inspected forces in Belgium and the Netherlands. Of the Belgian air force's progress since 1950 he spoke with admiration, following his inspection of night interceptor maneuvers at the air base near Louvain. His visit to the Dutch was timely, too, for, following the recent unsatisfactory maneuvers, even the Dutch press was critical of the nation's rearming and training program, and the Dutch Defense Minister felt it necessary to issue a reassuring statement about national intentions. The Minister's view is that rearming has suffered from trying to do too much too quickly, and that a more leisurely pace will produce better results. The important thing perhaps is his declaration that the three reserve divisions which had been promised for 1951 will, in fact, materialize. On this prospect General Eisenhower (whose observations last January, it will be recalled, caused a good deal of anguish in the Netherlands) has wisely said nothing, but seems to be awaiting developments. It can be understood that the prospective voyage of the United States Fourth Infantry Division to Europe is an event whose effect upon European rearming could be most encouraging.

Quite apart from NATO there has been this week a purely European political activity of general interest. This is the current meeting of the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe. Today is set for discussion of a proposal advanced earlier in the week by Duncan Sandys, the British delegate, pledging that any Soviet attack on Yugoslavia would be considered an attack upon the western nations in general.

Armed Forces Day Messages

The Army Navy Air Force Journal is pleased to transmit to the Services the following statements:

The Hon. George C. Marshall, Secretary of Defense: "On the occasion of the first anniversary of Armed Forces Day, we should take stock of the strides made in the unity of effort and purpose of our three Services. It has been demonstrated that our land, sea, and air forces have performed as a great coordinated team in Korea. In the present build-up of our armed forces and war material, the coordination of the three Services has been splendid."

"As a new Secretary of Defense, I have been surprised and highly gratified by the practical progress that has been made toward genuine, working unity."

The Hon. Frank Pace, Jr., Secretary of the Army: "Throughout its 176 years your Army has guarded the frontiers and has trained to be ready for action whenever our freedoms were threatened."

"For the past few months, the Army has again been called upon to fight our people's battles. This fighting has demanded teamwork, skills, sacrifices, courage, determination, and stamina as great as any in its long history. It has required the best of our regular forces as well as the best of thousands of our Reserves and National Guard."

"The Army is proud to stand with the other Services as 'Defenders of Freedom' on this second Armed Forces Day."

The Hon. Francis P. Matthews, Secretary of the Navy: "Armed Forces Day is a day of pride and faith in the American heritage—and of a renewed determination to preserve the ideals of peace and freedom which form so integral a part of that heritage. It celebrates the steadily increasing teamwork of all branches of the Service in filling their responsibilities toward the achievement of this great purpose."

"On Armed Forces Day we play host. We of the Navy keep open house ashore and afloat, wherever possible, so that all of you whose Navy it is will understand our part as America girds her strength."

The Hon. Thomas K. Finletter, Secretary of the Air Force: "The Department of the Air Force is proud of the contribution it has made to the team that is today helping defend freedom against aggression. The personnel of the Air Force, civilian and military, commissioned and enlisted, have met the challenge to our principles of democracy with loyalty, devotion, and courage."

"On this Armed Forces Day the United States Air Force asserts once more its determination to make whatever sacrifices may be necessary to help preserve freedom and peace and the security of the United States."

General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff: "This Armed Forces Day is observed in the midst of our steady mobilization of America's power. Our goal is security and peace. It is a mobilization of strength to deter further aggression."

"The advantages of successful war are doubtful. The disadvantages of unsuccessful war are certain. Real security lies in the prevention of war—and today that hope can come only through adequate preparedness."

"The men and women of the Armed Forces are actively protecting America, from Korea around the world, to the heart of Europe. They are giving us all of their support; they deserve all of ours."

General J. Lawton Collins, Chief of Staff, U.S.A.: "This second Armed Forces Day has special significance because it finds the members of the Armed Forces supporting the United Nations' decision to drive the aggressors from the Republic of Korea. Our nation can well be proud of the heroic achievements of its Armed Forces."

"We in the Army—National Guard, Organized Reserve Corps, and Regular Army alike—are proud of the part in what the defense team is doing to preserve freedom for the United States and the free peoples of the world."

"On this Armed Forces Day we pledge ourselves to continue to work toward these ends."

Admiral Forrest Sherman, Chief of Naval Operations: "A year ago, on the occasion of the first celebration of Armed Forces Day, we honored the concept of unification of the fighting Services. Now that concept has been tested in combat, and the team further welded by battle."

"Today let us, as Americans, honor the American fighting man. For it is he—the Soldier, the Sailor, the Airman, the Marine—who has fought to preserve freedom. It is his valor that has given renewed hope to the free world that by working together in discipline and faith our ideals of freedom will always prevail."

General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Chief of Staff, U.S.A.F.: "Lessons learned in Korea, forged in the heat of armed conflict, have shown that the concept of unification can stand the most rigorous of tests—that of proof by actual battle. The Air Force is proud to be a partner on the air-land-sea team of the Department of Defense that has acquitted itself so effectively with the forces of the United Nations in Korea."

"On this second Armed Forces Day, the Air Force stands ready to share with the Army and Navy the responsibility for preserving the peace through coordinated effort. In this way can we best protect our heritage of freedom."

General C. B. Cates, Commandant of the Marine Corps: "Armed Forces Day 1951 finds the Marine Corps, in concert with its sister services, busily engaged in the bitter struggle in Korea against the forces of tyranny and oppression. Thus far, we have committed ourselves well."

"But we are not content to rest on our laurels. We will continue to train diligently and fight with determination. No effort will be spared to field a well equipped, capable and confident combat force."

"In memory of our comrades, who have given their lives in defense of the God-given right of every man to be his own master, we Marines proudly accept our responsibilities as 'Defenders of Freedom.'"

'Secretary' or 'General'

When Senator Wiley (R-Wisc.) arose to begin his cross examination of the Secretary of Defense before the Joint Senate Committees this week, he asked:

"Mr. Secretary, how are we supposed to address you now, as Secretary or General?"

To which the Secretary replied: "I react more quickly to 'General.'"

Report on Training Centers

The Senate Armed Services Preparedness Subcommittee this week released detailed reports of its investigation of four indoctrination and basic training centers—Great Lakes Naval Training Center, Ill.; Sampson AFB, Geneva, N. Y.; Newport Naval Training Station, R. I.; Ft. Ord, Calif.

This is the second group of reports on 16 such centers which have been inspected by subcommittee staff investigators. On 25 April reports were issued on Ft. Leonard Wood, Mo.; Ft. Jackson, S. C.; Camp Chaffee, Ark.; U. S. Marine Corps Recruit Depot, San Diego, Calif.

Chairman Lyndon B. Johnson (D-Tex.) said: "Despite the deficiencies noted at these posts, the reports are generally reassuring. The overall training picture seems to be satisfactory and facilities generally adequate. Many shortcomings appear to be due to the 'growing pains' noted at such bases as Sampson."

"However, the subcommittee will not be satisfied with mere assurances that the unsatisfactory conditions will be 'corrected.' It intends to maintain an active interest in these bases in order to assure itself and the nation that recruits receive the best possible training under the best possible conditions."

Summaries of the reports issued this week:

Great Lakes Naval Training Center—The subcommittee found training conditions generally satisfactory but noted a "critical situation" in the absence of adequate housing for the dependents of permanent party personnel. The report also stated that morale of recruits over 21 years of age is "endangered" by the practice of stamping "Minor" on their liberty passes. The report stated the belief that the administrative difficulties of determining which recruits were minors and which ones are not minors are not difficult to overcome. The committee recommended that "henceforth the word 'minor' not be stamped on liberty passes of men who are not, in fact, minors."

Sampson Air Force Base—Training at this base was described as "minimum satisfactory" and the whole station was said to be suffering from "growing pains." The subcommittee noted that steps are being taken to improve conditions "as rapidly as possible." The report described the details of the death of Pvt. George C. Strong last March 2. It stated there was "no demonstrable connection" between his death and a punitive night formation in freezing temperatures ordered by a Staff Sergeant on 8 Feb. Nevertheless, the Base Command was criticized for failing to take "prompt and decisive action" in the case and the Air Force was criticized for not having followed a firm policy to prevent "unusual disciplinary measures" of the type meted out by the Staff Sergeant.

Newport Naval Training Station—The subcommittee described the training program as "good" but said that some retired Chief Petty Officers who have been recalled as instructors are "incompetent to teach." It recommended that they be properly trained or "reassigned to duty for which they are better qualified."

Ft. Ord—The training program here was rated "superior" and the command commended for making "a very effective use of the 'faculty system' of instruction." It was noted that medical personnel at the post have been "overworked" and the subcommittee recommended they be supplemented as soon as possible.

Window at USCG Chapel

The Navy and Marine Corps have decided to sponsor an etched glass window in the new U. S. Coast Guard Academy Chapel, now under construction at New London, Conn.

The cost of the project will be defrayed with voluntary contributions accepted from the officers and men of the two services.

4th Star for Gen. Ridgway

President Truman this week nominated Lt. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, USA, Far East Commander and Supreme Commander Allied Powers, to be a four-star general.

The elevation of General Ridgway to four-star status has long been predicted, even prior to his relieving General of the Army Douglas MacArthur last month.

It is interesting to note the rapidity with which General Ridgway has been advanced from the rank of lieutenant colonel to full general, compared with the 13 years required for his promotion from captain to major.

Appointed a second lieutenant of Infantry upon his graduation on 20 April 1917 from the U. S. Military Academy, General Ridgway was made a first lieutenant on 15 May of that year and became a temporary captain on 5 Aug. 1917, achieving the permanent rank of captain on 18 July 1919.

He was advanced to major on 1 Oct. 1932 and then to lieutenant colonel on 1 July 1940.

General Ridgway made temporary colonel four days after Pearl Harbor on 11 Dec. 1941, and was advanced to temporary brigadier general on 15 Jan. 1942, temporary major general on 6 Aug. 1942 and temporary lieutenant general on 4 June 1945. He is a permanent major general with rank from 2 April 1942.

It is conceivable at a later date that the President may name Lt. Gen. James A. Van Fleet for a fourth star also, since that is the normal rank for an officer who commands an army in the field.

Meantime, one of the corps commanders in Korea also rates an additional star. He is Maj. Gen. William M. Hoge, who commands the IX Corps.

Define Service Obligations

Service obligations of members of Active Reserve units have been defined by the Army.

Enlisted members of units of the Active Reserve that have been ordered into military service, who have not reported for active duty, and who would have less than one year to serve on current enlistment as extended, on the scheduled reporting date, will not be ordered to active military service.

However, the Army will continue to accept individual enlisted Reservists who volunteer for 21 months' active military service.

Under present policy, enlisted Reservists must be released from active duty at the expiration of 21 months of active duty or upon expiration of their enlistment in the Reserve Corps, whichever occurs first.

The Army is taking this action to prevent short-service enlisted members of units from entering on active duty with the unit and the consequent uneconomical administrative procedures such short service would entail.

UNITED STATES ARMY

AWC to Move

The Army War College which was reconvened at Ft. Leavenworth, Kans., in 1950 after a 10-year recess, will move at the conclusion of the current academic year, on 30 June to its new permanent location at Carlisle Barracks, Pa.

In order to accommodate the senior institution in the Army educational system, Carlisle Barracks is undergoing rearrangement of existing facilities. In addition, a housing project of the "Wherry" type is underway for the accommodation of students and their families.

The 1951-52 class will consist of 150 officers, predominantly of the Army, with representatives of the Departments of the Navy, Air Force and State.

The mission of the Army War College is to prepare selected officers for duties as commanders and staff officers in the highest positions in the Army and in joint commands.

The present commandant is Lt. Gen. J. M. Swing, wartime commander of the 11th Airborne Division and former commanding general of I Corps in the Japanese occupation and of The Artillery Center, Ft. Sill, Okla.

Temp. Captain Board

A board to select Regular and non-Regular officers for temporary advancement to the rank of captain met 8 May at the Pentagon under the presidency of Col. Charles W. Higgins.

Other board members are Colonels John K. Weber, Tom R. Stoughton, Frank A. Hollingshead, and A. B. Crane.

The recorders are Maj. William J. McDermott and Capt. Robert L. Morris.

Yet to be announced is a selection board to name Medical Service Corps officers for temporary promotion to lieutenant colonel, major and captain. It is expected to convene in about two weeks.

As reported in THE JOURNAL of 31 March, the criteria for temporary promotion to captain were as follows:

"a. All officers serving in the grade of first lieutenant with a date of rank or earlier on active duty as indicated below:

Army	31 Dec. 1948
JAGC	30 June 1949
The Chaplains	30 June 1949
WAC	31 Dec. 1948
MSC	30 June 1949
ANC	30 June 1949
WMSC	31 Dec. 1948

"b. Army Reserve or National Guard officers serving on active duty in the grade of first lieutenant who hold valid commissions in a higher grade in the Organized Reserve Corps or National Guard, regardless of dates of rank."

It is anticipated that the first list of temporary promotions under the new Army program will be made public in the near future, possibly before the end of the month. Boards are now considering officers for temporary advancement to the ranks of colonel, lieutenant colonel, major and captain.

Data for Cullum's Register

The Editor of the forthcoming edition of "Cullum's Register" advises that the book will soon go to press, and urges all U.S.M.A. graduates who have not already mailed the data about their records since 1940—requested of them several months ago by the Superintendent of the Military Academy—to send in this information immediately.

Unless this information is received at West Point prior to 1 July 1951 it will be too late for use in the preparation of this decennial edition of the book.

Marine Generals Shifted

The Marine Corps announced this week that it will transfer 15 general officers to new duty stations within the next three months.

Lt. Gen. LeRoy P. Hunt, scheduled to retire in July, will be relieved as commanding general of Fleet Marine Force, Atlantic, by Maj. Gen. Graves B. Erskine, commander of the Department of the Pacific. The change in commands will take place on 2 July. General Hunt was nominated this week by President Truman to have the rank of lieutenant general on the retired list effective from the date of his retirement.

One of the Corps' veteran airmen, Maj. Gen. Field Harris will return to the United States about mid-June from Korea where he commands the First Marine Aircraft Wing. He will be succeeded by Maj. Gen. Christian F. Schilt, Chief of Staff, Fleet Marine Force, Atlantic, at Norfolk. No new duty assignment was announced for General Harris and it is probable that he will be retired before the end of the current fiscal year.

Brig. Gen. Frank H. Lamson-Scribner, Assistant Director of Aviation, will succeed General Schilt at Norfolk; and Maj. Gen. Alfred H. Noble, Commanding General, Marine Barracks, Camp Joseph H. Pendleton, Calif., will relieve General Erskine at San Francisco about mid-June.

Maj. Gen. Henry D. Linscott, now in the office of Chief of Naval Operations, will report at Quantico by 3 June for duty as director of the Marine Corps Landing Force Development Center. General Linscott will be succeeded in his present assignment by Brig. Gen. Randolph McC. Pate, director of the Marine Corps Education Center at Quantico.

Brig. Gen. Leonard E. Rea, depot quartermaster at Philadelphia, will be detached 15 Aug. to report to Headquarters, Marine Corps as executive officer for the supply department.

Brig. Gen. John T. Selden, deputy camp commander of Camp Lejeune, N. C., and Brig. Gen. William S. Fellers, commanding general, Troop Training Unit, Pacific, at Coronado, California, will exchange commands about 1 July.

Brig. Gen. William J. Whaling, assistant commander of the Second Marine Division at Camp Lejeune, will be in Korea by 20 May to relieve Brig. Gen. Lewis B. "Chesty" Puller as assistant commander of the First Marine Division. General Puller will return to Camp Pendleton, Oceanside, Calif. to organize and train the new Third Marine Brigade.

Brig. Gen. James A. Stuart, chief of staff at Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va., will become director of the Marine Corps Educational Center at Quantico when directed by the Commandant of the Marine Corps.

Brig. Gen. James P. Riseley, professor of Naval Science at Princeton University, Princeton, N. J., will succeed General Stuart as chief of staff of Marine Corps Schools at Quantico early in July.

Brig. Gen. Robert O. Bare, chief of staff for the Marine Corps Education Center, Quantico, about mid-June will report to Marine Barracks, Camp Pendleton as deputy commander and chief of staff.

Reserves to Regulars

The Marine Corps has opened its regular ranks to enlisted reservists on active duty, without loss of rank or precedence.

Selection boards will pass on applications of master sergeants who desire to become regulars. Technical sergeants and below who apply, if approved by their local commanding officers, may immediately be enlisted in the regular Marine Corps. Both men and women may apply.

When you move, notify the Army Navy to the Army and Navy Air Force Journal.

Travel by Train is FIRST with the SERVICES!

• Of course, troop movements go by train! It's the most efficient, most convenient way—keeps organizations together—operates any time, everywhere. And the railroads allow 10% discount from regular passenger fares for all personnel of the Department of Defense traveling on transportation requests. That means that one man in every 10 travels FREE—a clear saving to the government of over $7,500,000 in 1950.

• Yes, only the railroads are capable of moving troops in division strength. Remember, too, furlough fares mean bargain fares to the officer or man on leave. For any travel, any time, you can depend on

France Honors Air Officers

Lt. Gen. John K. Cannon, USAF, Commanding General of Tactical Air Command, Langley AFB, Va., and Lt. Gen. Benjamin W. Chidlaw, USAF, Commanding General of Air Materiel Command at Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio, were honored by the Air Force of France on 3 May in a colorful ceremony in which Brig. Gen. Jacques Murtin, Air Attache of the French Embassy in Washington, awarded the Croix de Guerre with Palm to them and 52 other Air Force officers.

The award was made to former members of the Twelfth Air Force for their contributions in the liberation of the French national territory by participating in numerous combat missions over the highly defended targets of the Mediterranean area during the past war. Maj. Gen. Glenn O. Barcus, USAF, Deputy Commanding General of Tactical Air Command and Col. Willis F. Chapman, USAF, Commanding Officer of the 47th Bombardment Wing, Light, were other principal officers receiving the medal.

General Cannon commanded the Twelfth Air Force from December 1943 to March 1945, and Langley AFB was selected for the presentation by the French as a tribute to him. This is the first instance in which the French Government has awarded a large group of officers this honor at an American Air Base for World War II activities.

All of the recipients of the honor were not able to be present, some being located in Europe and the Pacific. Officers honored included:

Arnold T. Tuttle, USAF-Ret., medical director of United Air Lines and former commandant of the School of Aviation Medicine.

In addition, the Medical Service will present an exhibit of research and development activities currently being conducted at the School of Aviation Medicine, the Aero Medical Laboratory and the Arctic Aeromedical Laboratory. One of the displays will portray the important aircrew effectiveness program.

A feature of this year's meeting will be a symposium on "Air Transportability of the Sick and Injured" during which Lt. Col. Maurice B. Johnston, Hq. MATS, will read a paper entitled, "Flight Comfort and Safety for Patients." Following are the titles and authors of other Air Force presentations, according to an announcement by Col. Paul A. Campbell, Chairman of the Scientific Program Committee:

The USAF Institute of Technology this week announced opportunities for rated and non-rated AF officers to study advanced Aerial Photographic Reconnaissance at selected American universities.

"Courses in advanced photo recon will be offered at the graduate level to regular officers in grades of lieutenant through lieutenant colonel," Brig. Gen. Leighton I. Davis, USAFIT Commandant, stated. "Initial enrollments will be made at an appropriate civilian institution in September, 1951."

Officers holding a baccalaureate degree in physics, and math majors who carried a minor in physics, are eligible to submit request for evaluation. Others eligible will be holders of bachelor's degrees with specialization in photogrammetry, optics or photography, graduates of the United States Military or Naval Academies, and USAFIT engineering graduates who are recommended by the Commandant.

"It is also probable that we will accept officers who have extensive job experience in photo recon work and those who have completed service schooling in aerial photography, provided they have bachelor's degrees," General Davis pointed out.

Courses in cartography, photogrammetry, photographic interpretation, aerial photography, photographic physics and other subjects will be offered throughout the program, but much of the second year will be devoted to research in advanced photographic methods.

Interested regular officers are urged to submit request for evaluation direct to the Commandant, USAFIT, Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio. Such requests should be prepared as prescribed in AF Regulation 50-15. Evaluation will be prompt and thorough in each individual case, the USAFIT announcement stated, and letters of eligibility will be forwarded immediately where indicated.

Graduate Aero Medical Course

A class of more than 55 Aviation Medical Examiners received diplomas last week at the Air Force School of Aviation Medicine, Randolph AFB, Tex., after successfully completing six weeks of intensive training.

The class, composed of Regular, National Guard, Reserve and foreign medical officers, was the third to complete the AME course this year, bringing the total number of graduates to 192 since 1 Jan.

Maj. Gen. Morrison C. Stayer, retired, former Chief of Public Health and Welfare in the office of Military Government for Germany, delivered the graduation address. Following his address, Brig. Gen. Otis O. Benson, Jr., Commandant of the School of Aviation Medicine, presented diplomas to the graduates.

Due to the expansion of the Air Force, the AME course was cut from 11 to six weeks' duration. Because of this, graduates do not receive their AME ratings until successfully completing a three-months' supervised preceptorship. During this time, each must log 25 hours' flying time in military aircraft, conduct 50 physical examinations for flying and be properly recommended for the rating. Following the three months' preceptorship the graduates will be qualified for duty with Air Force units, where their primary duty will be to conduct physical examinations for flying.

Col. Domingo N. Monserrate, the only full colonel among the graduates, was class president. His permanent station is at Weaver AFB, S. D.

The two foreign officers in the class were Capt. Hans K. Knoepfel of Switzerland and Capt. Ignacio D. Chavez of Nicaragua.

The War in Korea

bardment of points on the east and west coasts of Korea, interdicting enemy lines of communication, and furnishing floating artillery support for ground troops operating along both coasts.

Despite adverse flying weather during part of the week carrier-borne navy planes struck heavily at truck convoys and troop concentrations and provided close tactical air support for Allied ground units.

The U. S. Destroyers Parks and Craig, the Cruiser Tacoma and the British Destroyer Comus continued the long bombardment of Wonsan on the east coast of North Korea, the Parks firing the 5,000th round of high explosive at the beleaguered city. The warships trained their guns on troop concentrations and military installations, and observed numerous fires and explosions through the persistent haze.

At Songjin the U. S. Destroyers Bausell and Thompson started numerous fires with accurately placed shots from their 5-inch guns. In the Kansong-Kosong area the U. S. Heavy Cruiser Helena and supporting destroyers poured hundreds of 5- and 8-inch shells into enemy positions and installations. Spotters reported many fires and heavy smoke.

On the west coast an international naval task force patrolled the Yellow Sea to halt Communist sea-borne traffic attempting to slip through the tight blockade. The U. S. Cruiser Toledo and the British Cruiser Ceylon remained in readiness off the west coast to furnish call fire support for Allied troops on the Han River front.

Navy planes from the U. S. Heavy Carriers Princeton and Boxer flew through thick weather to attack communications lines and to destroy numerous supply trucks in the vicinity of Tongyang and north of Wonsan.

Marine pilots from the U. S. Light Carrier Bataan knocked out enemy artillery positions, set fire to warehouses, and attacked entrenched enemy troops in close air support of Allied ground troops in the eastern sector.

While the most spectacular air activity of the week was the heavy strike on Wednesday on the new enemy air base at Sinuiju, planes of the Far East Air Force also made numerous other attacks on Red installations and Communications.

Superforts of the 11th Bomber Command, based in Japan and Okinawa, made a night attack with 100 tons of high explosives on the big enemy supply center at Sariwon. The attack began at dusk and lasted until midnight. No flak or air opposition was encountered. Both visual and radar bombing techniques were employed.

Republic of Korea, South African and American planes, including shore-based Marine aircraft, swept the highways, destroying hundreds of enemy motor vehicles in devastating attacks on supply routes. In low-level strikes in close support of ground troops they inflicted hundreds of casualties on the enemy.

Allied light bombers hit airfields at Pyongyang and Anak, destroying fuel dumps and various enemy installations. Marshalling yards were hit and many railway cars and other types of transportation equipment were destroyed or damaged. Hundreds of buildings used by the enemy for troop shelter and storage of supplies were ruined by air attacks.

Highways and railway trackage were bomb-cratered to impede the transportation of enemy troops and supplies. Trucks on road nets were attacked at night with excellent results by B-26 light bombers and Marine night flyers, aided by flare-dropping cargo-type aircraft. Night flyers also attacked railroad cars near Hwachong. Two of the cars exploded violently, indicating that they probably carried ammunition.

"I request my fellow citizens to display the flag of the United States on Armed Forces Day, and by fitting exercises to demonstrate their recognition of the gallantry, sacrifice, and devotion to duty of the men and women of the Armed Forces."—PRESIDENT TRUMAN.

Armed Forces Day. Throughout the nation on next Saturday, 19 May, the citizenry will pay honor to the component forces of National Defense in the second annual observance of Armed Forces Day. Under the sponsorship of civilian patriotic organizations there will be parades, dinners, and meetings to honor the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps. In their turn the Services, wherever possible, will hold open house at their posts, stations, and ships to play hosts to local visitors and display the advances made in modern weapons and fighting material.

It should be particularly noted that in the little more than three and a half years since the National Security Act went into effect considerable progress has been made. There have been growing pains in the form of inter-service disputes but they are working themselves out and while they are often bitter they do serve to clarify situations that might otherwise boil underground. It is noteworthy that in the present extensive hearings revolving around General of the Army Douglas MacArthur nothing but praiseworthy references to inter-service cooperation have been made. General MacArthur himself not only gave high praise to the integration of the fighting forces in Korea but offered individual compliments to performances of the Army, Navy, Air Force, and the Marine Corps. This is a healthy situation and can not help but be conducive to the highest efficiency of our fighting forces as a team.

Universal Military Training. It is unfortunate that the remarks of General MacArthur on the subject of Universal Military Training are being used to defeat UMT in the Senate-House Conference committee where its fate is now pending. It is all the more unfortunate in that General MacArthur himself has always been a staunch advocate of UMT. In fact, he told the current committee that he is quite sure that if we had had Universal Military Training 25 years ago the "whole situation would have been different." The General now feels that we should wait until the present emergency is over and then "sum up the facts" and make a decision. "I believe," he said, "the greatest possible consideration has got to be given to the demands of industry." The General possibly was not aware that UMT already is one of the most thoroughly studied and documented problems facing this country. A long and most searching investigation was made by the Compton Commission, composed of civilians from all walks of life, which strongly recommended that UMT be adopted as a national policy. The project has the unanimous backing of the heads of the Armed Forces, the President, and particularly the present Secretary of Defense, General George C. Marshall. Committees of Congress have put it through a most exhaustive inquiry. As to industry, General MacArthur probably had not been informed that the United States Chamber of Commerce, which certainly is well aware of the demands of industry, is today, and has been for some time, a strong advocate of Universal Military Training.

Now, when Congress and the Nation is conscious of the need for National Security measures, is the time to put UMT on the statute books so that when the emergency subsides there can be an orderly transition from the draft to military training. That would give us the basis for an enduring system of National Defense. When the emergency has passed and the nation turns to the ways of peace there would be little chance of getting a UMT law and we would return again to the old system of permitting our defenses to deteriorate in times of peace.

Service Pay. With pressure and sentiment increasing for a cost-of-living increase for Civil Service employees of the Government, it was a wise move on the part of Representative James E. Van Zandt (R-Pa.), to introduce his bill for a similar type of pay increase for personnel of the Armed Services. It is altogether too easy for the Services to be neglected in the matter of pay readjustment (as they have been many times over recent years). However, in considering the

Retired Officers

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

The JOURNAL says that field grade officers will be selected for active service in the following priorities: "Priority I: Qualified volunteers of the Organized Reserve Corps, and of the National Guard."

"Priority II: Members of the Volunteer Reserve."

Will someone please tell me why there is not a third priority listed under the title of "Retired Regular Army Officers"? Why don't we have the same right to build up our retired pay as a Reserve Officer? After all, most of us did not get a raise from the 1949 pay bill, said bill being designed to make it expedient that a younger officer stay far away from enemy fire, jeep accidents, and disease-ridden countries until he gets 24 years' service.

Besides, it costs the pay of the officer who replaces us, plus our retired pay to keep us inactivated.

Commissions for CPO's

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

The Reserve side of the Navy is at it again regarding the promotions of enlisted men. It seems they feel that they are being pushed around. That certainly is humorous. Having been in the Navy for the past 17 years, and speaking for many in my category, we surely are the ones who are being set aside.

A large number of Chief Petty Officers were commissioned to Lieutenant (1350 Ground Officer), and then came the mad cut for budgetary reasons (Johnson). What happened to us? We were reverted to our permanent rank as CPO. We accepted our commissions knowing that they were temporary, so the reverting to CPO was not entirely unexpected.

With the de-mothballing of the fleet, and recommissions for the pilots, many reservists are being matter of tying in service pay rates with the cost of living index it must be remembered that the pay readjustment act of 1949 fell far short of bringing the pay tables up to relative costs at that time. Thus to readjust today's pay only in comparison with the cost of living in 1949 would not be giving full justice to the members of the Armed Services. But it would be a step in the right direction—particularly if coupled with the restoration of military income tax exemptions.

recalled involuntarily. They are not very happy about being recalled for an indefinite time, and do not actually want to serve again. Yet they are being recalled with their former commissions in effect.

The question bothering us is this—why haven't some of the USN men who held commissions before, and are certainly going to remain in the Navy as a career, been recommissioned in the new expansion program? It would certainly benefit the Navy to re-commission the men who are up-to-date on the affairs of the Naval Service, rather than go through the expense and time element of indoctrinating the recallists. This question, so far, remains unanswered.

Ex-Lieutenant

Army Temporary Promotions

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

The temporary promotion system for Regular Army officers will perpetuate the injustices of the World War II system.

The "best qualified" method of selection should be used only for officers who have completed ten years of service. During a ten-year period, sufficient data on the abilities of an officer will be accumulated to mark him as better or lesser qualified than the next man. Until this ten-year limit is reached or prior to promotion to the temporary rank of lieutenant colonel, the "fully qualified" system should be used.

Only two changes are needed in the present system. These are:

1. Based on experience, similar areas of consideration for Regular and Reserve officers for temporary promotion.

2. Based on experience, realignment of the permanent and temporary ranks of Regular officers recently integrated through competitive tours or by direct appointment.

Major, Arty.

IMPOSITION of economic sanctions on Red China moved closer this week, with a virtual agreement by the United Nations Sanctions Committee to recommend an embargo on the shipment of arms and other war materials to that country. A formal proposal for the arms embargo was submitted by the United States to the 12-nation Sanctions Committee this week. This action followed informal discussions, during which it is understood Great Britain and France indicated they would support the American resolution.

Before becoming effective the proposal would have to be approved by the 60-nation Political Committee and finally by a plenary session of the General Assembly. Undoubtedly it will encounter the strong opposition of the Soviet bloc. It has been predicted that at least some of the Arab nations would refrain from voting on the question.

The American resolution would prohibit shipments of arms, ammunition, implements of war, atomic energy materials, petroleum and items useful in the production of arms to areas controlled by Chinese Communists. This resolution would appear to be sufficiently broad so that, if adopted, it would bring to a halt all rubber shipments to the Chinese mainland. British officials announced that the export of rubber from Malaya to Red China would be stopped for the remainder of the year.

► BOTH SECRETARY OF DEFENSE George C. Marshall and General of the Army Douglas MacArthur in testimony at Senate hearings expressed concern over the fact that materials useful to the Chinese Communists in their military operations in Korea were being supplied through Hong Kong. British officials were inclined to doubt that war materials reaching China in this way were an important factor in the current conflict.

Britain has already cut off shipments of war potential goods to Red China. Sir Hartley Shawcross, president of the Board of Trade, told the House of Commons that rubber shipments to the Chinese Reds would be stopped at once. In April, Red China received 3,265 tons of Malayan rubber, a decline of more than half from the March total.

If the proposed embargo is finally approved by the United Nations it will undoubtedly be ignored by Russia, which is certain to continue to supply aircraft, gasoline and other important war goods to the Communist aggressors. However, Russia does not produce rubber and some other important items, and many classes of other war supplies. Soviet production is largely limited to her own requirements, with no large surplus available for transfer to her Asiatic allies.

► RUSSIA, in a sharp note this week, demanded that a meeting of representatives of the foreign ministers of the United States, Great Britain, Russia and Red China be held in June or July to draft a Japanese peace treaty. In this message Russia denounced the United States for the use of Japanese territory and human resources for "armed intervention in Korea," and demanded the withdrawal of all occupation troops from Japan within a year after conclusion of a peace treaty.

The note specified that the proposed treaty must provide for the transfer of Formosa and the Pescadores to Red China, and that the Ryuku and Bonin Islands must be placed under Japanese sovereignty, rather than continue under United States trusteeship. Further, Russia insisted that Japan's armed forces be limited to those required for self-defense, and that Japan must not be allowed to enter any coalition against a state which fought her in World War II. Russia would agree to the admission of Japan to the United Nations, following conclusion of the proposed treaty.

Scarcely had the Russian note been translated at the State Department when its rejection by the United States was announced. The Department said the note embodied a proposal periodically submitted by Russia "to stall the conclusion of Japanese peace."

It was made clear that the United States would go ahead with current preparations for a Japanese peace settlement, with or without Russian participation. Peace negotiations are so well advanced that Washington hopes that a treaty will be concluded within the next two months. Terms have been tentatively approved by all countries participating in the Pacific war, except Russia, which was also consulted, but which broke off discussions two months ago.

The Communist party of Iran has demanded that the government expel the American military mission from that country, that Red China be recognized, that political prisoners be freed, that martial law in the oilfields be ended, and that the Bahrain Islands oilfields be nationalized. The Bahrain Islands in the Persian Gulf, claimed by Iran, are under a British protectorate, and the oilfields are owned by a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Company of California and the Texas Corporation.

► IN PANAMA, an uneasy quiet succeeded rioting late this week after President Arnulfo Arias had been ousted by the national assembly. The deposed President a few days ago dissolved the assembly, abolished the 1946 constitution, and by Presidential decree reintroduced the 1941 charter, thereby greatly enlarging the powers of the President. He also abolished the right of habeas corpus and placed the justices of the higher courts on a temporary basis.

President Arias attempted to justify his arbitrary action on the ground that it was necessary for the safety of the state, since Communist-inspired subversive plots made it mandatory for him to act in support of the nation's obligation to defend the Panama Canal and to protect the integrity of the country.

The reaction of the people to this sudden loss of liberty was instantaneous. A general strike, which was immediately called, effectively tied up all activities in Panama City, and a wave of violence swept the community, resulting in several deaths and numerous injuries. Apparently the President had erroneously counted on the support of the national police, but which, however, was withheld by the chief, Jose Antonio Remon, regarded as the strong man of the Republic.

In the meantime the national assembly met in defiance of the dissolution decree of the President and ousted Arias from the presidency, which made Vice President Alcibiades Arsemena chief executive of the Republic. After a conference with Police Chief Remon, President Arias then rescinded his previous actions. However, this failed to satisfy the public and the police and the ouster of the President was made effective.

Combat Pay Delay—Delayed first by necessary inter-Service and Department of Defense coordination at the Pentagon, held up later because of prolonged manpower debate on Capitol Hill, action on legislation to provide hazard duty pay for ground force personnel now is being held up further by the top-level hearings before the combined Senate Armed Services and Foreign Relations Committees. It is recalled that the Senate Armed Services Committee has held several hearings on the measure to give officers $100 and enlisted men $50 per month combat pay, but when these hearings will be resumed is not certain.

The House has taken no action whatsoever on the bill and conceivably may decide to hold up any committee work on the legislation until it is disposed of by the Senate.

Transfer MacArthur's G-1—Maj. Gen. William A. Beiderlinden, USA, Assistant Chief of Staff, G-1, Personnel, General Headquarters, Far East Command, who had served in this post under General of the Army Douglas MacArthur since October 1946, is being transferred to Headquarters, Third Army, Ft. McPherson, Ga.

His replacement in the Far East Command was not announced.

General Beiderlinden becomes the third major general to leave Far East Command headquarters in Tokyo since the removal of General MacArthur. Maj. Gen. Charles A. Willoughby, who was Assistant Chief of Staff, G-2, is retiring and has been ordered to Letterman General Hospital in San Francisco for the final-type physical examination.

Meantime, Maj. Gen. Courtney Whitney, who was General MacArthur's military secretary, has applied for retirement and has been told that his application would be accepted. General Whitney, who returned to the U. S. with General MacArthur and has remained with the former Far East commander as advisor and spokesman, has been informed that he can either report to a hospital for final-type examination or have this done through review of administrative records. As THE JOURNAL went to press, General Whitney had not informed the Army as to which option he desired.

Heads Medical Council—With the resignation on 30 June of Dr. Richard L. Meiling, a brigadier general in the Air Force Reserve, as Chairman of the Armed Forces Medical Policy Council, Dr. W. Randolph Lovelace, II, a colonel in the Air Force Reserve, will move up from status as a council member to be its new chairman. In the near future, the Department of Defense will name a successor to Dr. Lovelace as a council member.

During World War II, Dr. Lovelace was on active duty with the Army Air Force, advancing from the rank of major to that of colonel. While in active service, Dr. Lovelace was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Air Medal and three combat stars, the Legion of Merit, and the Army Commendation Ribbon. In 1945 he was presented the Royal Order of the Sword by the King of Sweden.

Having served as surgical consultant for a number of hospitals and two commercial airlines, Dr. Lovelace also acted as special consultant to the Air Force, and was appointed a member of the Armed Forces Medical Policy Council when it was established on 2 Jan. 1951.

Assigned to MATS Hdqs.—Lt. Col. Richard L. Temple, USAF, deputy commander of the Military Air Transport Service's (MATS) headquarters, Dhahran Airfield and former OIC of the Saudi Arabian Training Mission, has been assigned duty with Headquarters USAF here. A veteran of World War II service in North Africa and the European theater, the colonel was one of the first officers assigned to MATS in June 1948. His new post will be with the Office of Assistant for Air Bases, Deputy Chief of Staff and Operations, in the Pentagon.

Medical Regulating Group—Col. Byron L. Steger, MC, USA, Deputy Chief, Armed Services Medical Regulating Office, and Capt. T. J. Reese, MSC, USAF, Air Force staff member, Armed Services Medical Regulating Office, recently completed a 10-day inspection trip that included Army, Navy, and Air Force medical facilities. They were joined on the west coast by Col. Joseph Baird, MC, USAF, Continental Division, MATS, and Maj. Harry Coffman, MC, USAF, Flight Surgeon, 1700th Air Transport Group.

Army Dental Corps—Maj. Gen. Walter D. Love, Chief, Dental Division, Office of The Army Surgeon General, will leave 14 May for a visit to dental installations in the Third Army Area, accompanied by Col. Herman J. Lambert, Dental Surgeon, Third Army.

Notification has been received that Lt. Col. Jack B. Caldwell, Army Medical Center, Washington, D. C., has successfully passed the examination and been certified as a diplomate of the American Board of Oral Surgery.

Lt. Col. Lowell E. McKelvey, who has been the PMS&T at the School of Dentistry, University of Michigan, for the past three years and who has been pursuing graduate studies in oral surgery, has been relieved and assigned to the U. S. Army Forces, Antilles, with station at San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Chapel of Rest—At the Seattle Port of Embarkation a mortuary chapel, called "The Chapel of Rest," has been dedicated—the only one of its kind at any port of embarkation. There, bodies of war dead will lie in state in the chapel before being transported to their homes for burial. Presentation of the keys to the chapel to Brig. Gen. Fenton S. Jacobs, commanding general of the Seattle Port of Embarkation, was made by Lt. Col. P. H. Leibrand, Ft. Lawton Post Engineer. General Jacobs then turned the keys over to Chaplain (Capt.) Gary W. Roush, Port chaplain.

The Very Rev. Joseph P. Dougherty, Chancellor of the Catholic Diocese of Seattle, gave the invocation. An old Hebrew prayer, the "Prayer of Peace" was given by Philip Posner, representative of the Jewish Welfare Board in Seattle, and Mrs. Jessie L. Conner, president of the Gold Star Mothers, Chapter No. 1, responded for all mothers.

Captain Courtney Retires—Following 30 years' service, Capt. Osceola S. Courtney was retired from the Army at Ft. Bliss, Tex., on 30 April, where he had been assistant adjutant general.

Captain and Mrs. Courtney reside at 135 Greenwood Drive, El Paso, Tex. Their only son, Warren, is a staff sergeant in the Air Force, stationed on Okinawa. Captain Courtney will be employed by the Army Exchange Service at Ft. Bliss, but plans to make his permanent home in San Antonio.

Ships of the Fleet—THE USS GARDINERS BAY, seaplane tender, following a 10-month tour of duty in the Far East, reached Pearl Harbor late last month en route to San Diego, Calif.

► THE USS SALISBURY SOUND, large seaplane tender, under command of Capt. Stanley C. Strong, USN, this week took 156 officers of the U. S. Naval School, General Line, Monterey, Calif., aboard for practical instruction.

Bronze Stars and Letters of Commendation with ribbon were awarded to fourteen officers and men of the USS Rochester (CA-124) in a mass presentation ceremony held recently at Mare Island Naval Shipyard in Vallejo, Calif. Rear Adm. Frank E. Beatty, USN, area commander, made the presentations. The awards, 11 Bronze Stars and three Letters of Commendation, each with combat distinguishing device, were made for meritorious service during the ROCHESTER's seven months in Korean waters. In addition to the awards made by Admiral Beatty, three Bronze Stars, two Distinguished Flying Crosses, eight Air Medals and two Letters of Commendation were made to personnel who have transferred since the cruiser's return to the United States in late January.

Capt. E. L. Woodyard, USN, commanding officer during the period the ROCHESTER was in the Far East, received the Legion of Merit on 19 February when he was relieved by Capt. Rodmon D. Smith, USN, present commanding officer.

Official Censor—An officer who has one of the biggest burdens of responsibility during the current MacArthur inquiry in the Senate is Vice Adm. Arthur C. Davis.

As Director of the Joint Staff, Office of the Joint Chiefs, Admiral Davis has to pass on all of the testimony presented at the hearings and delete that which would affect security.

Admiral Davis is completing two years in his present assignment as Director of the Joint Staff. Immediately prior to his reporting for duty with the Joint Chiefs, he was a member of the Joint Strategic Survey Committee. During World War II, he served on four different assignments in the Pacific: First, as Fleet Aviation Officer on the staff of the Commander in Chief, Pacific Fleet (from the time of the Pearl Harbor attack until the following July); then as commanding officer of the carrier Enterprise (for a period of four months during which he won the Navy Cross), and later as Chief of Staff and Aide to the Commander, Fifth Fleet, and as Commander of Carrier Division Five. He reported for duty with the Joint Chiefs in September 1949.

Bataan New Plane No. 8613—Once named the SCAP, then the Bataan, General of the Army Douglas MacArthur's former private plane this week returned to the Far East with the identification C-121 plane No. 8613. On its flight back to Tokyo, piloted by Maj. William E. Gregg, USAF, the plane carried a load of military passengers. Lt. Col. Anthony Story, who was the plane commander for the trip from the Far East to the United States, remained in this country. In addition to being the plane commander, he was also aide to General MacArthur in the Far East.

Signal Corps Chief—Maj. Gen. George I. Back became the new Chief Signal Officer of the Army 2 May when he took oath of office at General Headquarters, Far East Command, in Tokyo. The ceremony took place in the Dai Ichi Building in the presence of friends and associates who have served with him on the staff at GHQ, where he spent the last four years as Signal Officer and Chief of Civil Communications for SCAP. General Back will arrive in San Francisco on 21 May and in Washington, D. C., on 26 May.

His successor in Tokyo will be Col. Elton F. Hammond, who recently arrived from the Pentagon where he had been Executive in the Office of the Assistant Chief of Staff, G-4.

National Guard Record—Maj. Gen. Raymond H. Fleming, Acting Chief, National Guard Bureau, reported this week that more than 250,000 guardsmen remain under State control, comprising 21 divisions and 17 regimental combat teams and supporting troops. In a radio interview with Mr. Peter Edson, Newspaper Enterprise Association columnist, General Fleming said about one-third of the Army Guard, including six divisions, and 75 per cent of the Air National Guard are on active duty or have been alerted. The entire Air National Guard with the exception of five fighter wings, said General Fleming, will be in active service by the end of the year.

The National Guard Bureau chief noted that two National Guard divisions are in Japan and added that "other divisions may soon go overseas," undoubtedly to bolster General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower's command.

In Japan, the 45th Infantry Division, an Oklahoma National Guard unit, under command of Maj. Gen. James C. Styron, has been deployed to Hokkaido to complete its training. Brig. Gen. Robert L. Dulaney is Assistant Division Commander and Brig. Gen. Hal L. Muldrow is Artillery Commander.

Arrival of the 45th followed by a few weeks the landing of the 40th Infantry Division, a California National Guard unit.

Progress of the National Guard in the United States was reflected this week with the announcement by Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall that the 5000th National Guard Army Unit, the Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 108th Armed Cavalry Group, Tupelo, Miss., has been accorded Federal recognition.

Secretary Marshall wrote General Fleming that "this achievement since the beginning of postwar reorganization of the National Guard in 1946 should be a source of pride to all members of the National Guard and the National Guard Bureau. Such an effort," said General Marshall, "adds materially to the defensive strength of our country and the National Guard today, as in the past, continues to play a vital part in the defense of our country."

In Korea, the 196th Field Artillery Battalion of the Tennessee National Guard is now in action with the 7th Infantry Division. During their first five days in combat, this unit, commanded by Lt. Col. A. J. Tothacer, fired 2,213 rounds of high explosive.

The first National Guard truck unit to support combat troops on the X Corps front, the 107th Truck Company, which arrived in Korea in January, has drawn high praise from Maj. Gen. Clark L. Ruffner, 2d Division commander, for "superior performance in spite of harassing fire" for the period 10 January-18 February. This unit is from Haleyville, Ala.

"A Soldier's Faith"—"The Eighth Army and its honored sister services of sea and air choose to live in history and in the hearts of their countrymen, forever unconquered." Thus Lt. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, USA, concludes an article titled "A Soldier's Faith," which appears in the 22 May issue of Look magazine. At the outset, General Ridgway notes that the Eighth Army is a "unique military force," made up of troops from 15 nationalities. . . "the first army to fight in direct defense of the principle of collective security." Thus, says General Ridgway, "much is at stake here."

General Ridgway states that "there is no finer military team than the United Nations command which was organized by the brilliant, inspired leadership of its former Commander in Chief, General of the Army Douglas MacArthur."

The new Far East Commander writes that "what makes the Eighth Army great is its unsurpassed combination of leadership and teamwork up from squad and section, through company, battalion, regiment, division and corps—United States, United Nations and Republic of Korea." Warning of the peril of communism—"nowhere is its menace more manifestly alive and potent than in Korea," he says—General Ridgway declares that "we have inflicted heavy punishment on the enemy we fight, but at this writing we have not yet come to the crisis. This crisis is coming. In my heart, I know we shall meet and surmount it, not lightly or easily. It will take stoutness of heart, physical stamina, fighting skill and, above all, that unconquerable spirit which, trusting in God, will never be downed."

New D. C. Commissioner—To succeed Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young, who is retiring because of physical disability, President Truman has named Col. Bernard L. Robinson, CE, USA, to be Engineer Commissioner for the District of Columbia. A wartime brigadier general, Colonel Robinson is South Atlantic Division Engineer at Atlanta, Ga.

One Way to Beat the Act—When Marine Cpl. Homer A. Alexander's enlistment ended after six years in the Corps, the one thing he wanted to do most was to reenlist. The Career Compensation Act slightly altered his plans, however. The Act provides that if you have dependents you must be a sergeant with seven or more years' service in order to ship over. Corporal Alexander was only a corporal, he was married, and he had only six years' service . . . but he managed to reenlist.

In the process he lost his wife, $185 for legal fees and shipping over pay and his corporal's stripes. But now, he has recovered everything but the money. After reenlisting, he remarried his wife, and recently was promoted back to corporal.

Corporal Alexander says "I got what I wanted. I'm now a Marine and building my time on 30 years for retirement."

Aerial Locust Survey—One of the most unusual aerial missions in the history of Air Rescue Service took place at Wheelus Field, Tripoli, Libya, on 26 April, when a twin-engine Grumman SA-16 amphibian was utilized as a low-flying observation post from which to survey locust breeding grounds in the desert south of Wheelus Field. Libya for several months has been threatened with a locust plague, the first in this area since 1946. Local government officials were confident that all known or suspected locust breeding grounds in the Libyan desert had been located by jeep and camel patrols, however a rapid survey was considered desirable.

Upon request from British officials, now administering the former Italian colony of Libya, 7th Air Rescue Squadron's Flight "C," based at Wheelus Field, made one SA-16 available for the low-altitude flight. In approximately two hours the SA-16 covered desert territory which would have taken weeks of ground operations to survey thoroughly.

Pilot and co-pilot on the mission were Capt. Kenneth B. Christensen, and Maj. Leonard H. Burgess. Major Burgess is commanding officer of Flight "C" and Captain Christensen is Operations Officer of the Flight.

Navigator on the mission was Capt Joseph H. Mutz. Flight Engineer was T/S Chester Pacewitz.

Wheelus Field, an installation of Military Air Transport Service's Atlantic Division, is commanded by Col. Fred O. Easley, jr.

WHO'S been hibernatin'?

If you'll pardon the pun, we at Delco Radio don't bear the slightest resemblance to brother Bruin.

We haven't been hibernatin' . . . not by a long shot!

The fact is we've been too busy for words . . . and have been ever since those critical days of World War II when we produced tons and tons of radio and electronic equipment for the armed forces.

You know those fine resonant radios in Cadillacs and Buicks and other GM cars? They're our products. Last year we produced nearly 2,000,000 radios for cars, trucks and other vehicles . . . many more than any other builder in the business.

You see, we've really been busy . . . busy getting additional experience . . . busy acquiring greater facilities . . . busy finding new ways to increase production efficiency. And, today, we can truthfully say that we're better prepared than ever to serve our country. Just say the word. We're ready to go!

Testimony Before Senate Committees on Relief of General MacArthur

FOLLOWING are excerpts from the testimony given before the meetings of the combined Senate Committees on Armed Services and on Foreign Relations. Senator Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.), chairman of the Armed Services Committee, served as chairman of the combined committees, which met in executive session and released a censored transcript for publication.

GEN. MACARTHUR

Censorship of Testimony

Sen. Russell (Chairman). "We asked for the best assistance and advice that was available to us in this field—that is, a representative from the Department of Defense—to pass upon those matters within the department."

"I communicated with the department and as a result the director of the Joint Staff, Vice Admiral (Arthur C.) Davis, is evaluating the testimony as it is transcribed and is indicating items which in his best professional military judgment should be deleted for security reasons."

"There has also been assigned to express the views of the Department of State Mr. Fisher, but I am advised that on yesterday he had no occasion to question any of the evidence. It was all handled by the expert assigned by the defense establishment."

Effectiveness of Air Power

Gen. MacArthur. "The reason that the Air has not been more successful in stopping that pouring down is because they don't have the latitude of operation to hit deeper than the Yalu."

"You understand the Yalu is only two or three days' march from the front line, and it gives the Air a very limited opportunity, especially when you would have a couple of days of obscure weather where the Air couldn't hit, you could get troops down from the Yalu to the front line without being subjected to any air attack, but if the Air could go where they are assembling, could go to the foundation roots where these armies are being assembled to be thrown at us, they could destroy them."

"At least they could so decimate them that their efficacy when they reached the front lines would be most materially decreased."

"The Air has done a magnificent job in Korea. Under the limitations placed upon it, it has been far in excess of any anticipation that I had."

Rights of Subordinates

Gen. MacArthur. "I wouldn't have the slightest objection to any officer in my command stating his views on any subjects in any way he wished, just so he did it in a courteous, polite way following the normal code of a gentleman's conduct."

Sen. Kefauver (D-Tenn.). "You mean if in the reconquest of the Philippines some major general had had a different view about how the whole campaign should have been carried on, had written me a letter, knowing that I was going to publish it and cause a debate about the general strategy of your Pacific campaign, you would have sanctioned what he did?"

Gen. MacArthur. "Senator, I think there is not a week goes by that things of that sort don't occur."

Sen. Kefauver. "I mean would you have sanctioned it?"

Gen. MacArthur. "I would ask you to examine your own files to see if you haven't gotten a great many complaints from juniors in the service of the seniors that are over them."

Sen. Kefauver. "Yes, but they always say, 'Be sure and don't show this to anybody.'"

Gen. MacArthur. "Well, once more that is a matter of your discretion. Representative Martin exercised it."

Sen. Kefauver. "But my question is, General MacArthur, when you were conducting the Philippine campaign, if your chief of staff—who was your chief of staff?"

Gen. MacArthur. "General Sutherland was my chief of staff. I think he is a West Virginian."

Sen. Kefauver. "If he had written to me knowing that I was in a big debate in Congress about whether you were right or not in deciding how you were going to make that magnificent reconquest of the Philippines, if he had written to me expressing a different opinion from the one you had, and criticizing even mildly what you had decided to do, knowing that I was going to inject that opinion into a debate, would you have sanctioned him doing so?"

Gen. MacArthur. "Certainly. I can't tell you how many times my staff has disagreed with me not only privately but publicly. The only thing I ever required was complete honesty of their opinions."

Sen. Kefauver. "You do not think an opinion different from the immediate commander for public debate weakens you in the eyes of the enemy and shows a division in the ranks?"

Gen. MacArthur. "I believe there is a certain degree of propriety in those things of course, Senator."

General Ridgway

Sen. Cain (R-Wash.). "General MacArthur, all of us are deeply concerned about matters of policy here at home, but we are very mindful of the great responsibilities which have been imposed upon your successor, Gen. Matthew Ridgway in the Far East. We Americans at home wish to help General Ridgway in every possible manner."

"Would you care to reflect on General Ridgway's capacity as your successor? And, General MacArthur, I ask this question because I take for granted that General Ridgway was ordered to Korea with your concurrence."

Gen. MacArthur. "General Ridgway was my selection and recommendation as the commander of the Eighth Army after the unfortunate death of that very magnificent soldier, General Walker. I have known General Ridgway for thirty years. I don't think you could have made a more admirable selection in the Far East than General Ridgway. I hold him in the highest esteem, not only as a soldier but as a cultured gentleman and one of the most magnificent characters I have ever been acquainted with."

Sen. Cain. "General MacArthur, I think I ought to say this off the record. (A discussion was had off the record.) General MacArthur, some of my colleagues in the Senate appear in days gone by to have been in doubt about your military relationship with General Ridgway, who succeeded General Walker, as you have stated, as Eighth Army Commander."

"It is my understanding that from the moment General Ridgway reported to Korea until you turned over your several commands to him, that General Ridgway took his orders and directives from you as supreme commander and from you alone. Is that understanding of mine, sir, correct?"

Gen. MacArthur. "That is absolutely correct, and I don't know how there could have been any more complete cooperation, devotion, and loyalty both ways than between General Ridgway and myself."

No Farewell to Command

Sen. Cain. "General MacArthur, it is my impression, sir, that you did not address or bid farewell to your troops or to the Japanese people, your friends, before leaving the Far East. I do not know this to be so, but should you care to tell me that it is so, would you give me your reasons as to why you thought it proper to do something which I as a lay person would think very unusual, and should you provide me with the facts of the case, I will be better qualified to respond to some of my friends in Korea who have written to me in recent weeks and said:

"The General must have been busy or preoccupied, but we had no word from a man for whom we had fought and done our best for a good many long months."

General MacArthur. "It was a matter of great grief and regret to me that I did not regard it as appropriate to address the command which I no longer possessed. The order of my relief was a summary one."

"I do not challenge it in the slightest degree directly or indirectly. It was the judgment of one individual. The final judgment will be made by public opinion and the historical future, but the order actually relieved me of the command upon receipt."

"I was no longer in command, and I did not think it was appropriate for me to encroach in any way upon the prerogatives of the Commander in Chief at that time, who was General Ridgway. It is a matter of the greatest regret that I couldn't express the thanks and the gratitude for the loyalty and bravery and determination with which that command supported me."

"I can say almost the same of the Japanese people. I think both of them realize that it was not a failure on my part, a voluntary failure on my part, but what was forced upon me by the circumstances that existed."

Sen. Cain. "On yesterday, General MacArthur, if I am not mistaken, you said that your successor, General Ridgway, was as of the time you received the order relieving you from your duties, some three or four hundred miles away."

Gen. MacArthur. "At that time General Ridgway was at the front. He was superintending personally the projected attack upon the enemy center at Chorwon."

"Upon receipt of the message I directed the Chief of Staff to phone him at once that he was in command, and I turned over to the Chief of Staff the functions of my command until General Ridgway could come over."

Integration of Forces

Sen. Johnson (D-Tex.). "There is a school of thought in the United States which believes that we should confine the bulk or all of our ground forces to the continental United States and that we should provide other nations with nothing but sea and air support in the battle against communism. Now, I gather from your statements that you do not embrace that theory completely and I am just wondering if I am correct in that assumption."

Gen. MacArthur. "I believe that it is the gravest possible mistake in the use of the armed forces of a nation to try to draw the lines of demarcation between ground troops, air troops and Navy troops. They are an integrated team. At one place you may need the preponderance of one element or the other, but the force that we apply should be based upon the complete integration of the potential of those three forces. It is impossible to make such a simplification, in my opinion."

Universal Military Training

Sen. Johnson. "Since we are living now, and will continue to live for years to come, in a world of uncertainties, I wonder if you do not think that some system of universal training which would guarantee that all of our young men would be made available for service, and they would be trained young men, should be invoked so that when the nation was threatened we would be prepared?"

Gen. MacArthur. "As I said, Senator, I am for preparedness, and the maximum preparedness, and the maximum utilization of all of our resources. Now, whether universal military training accomplishes that fact would have to be pretty carefully considered by me."

"There are other demands upon our manpower. Whether the total effort to train these great masses of millions of men, whether in actual combat those men would go into the niches for which they have been trained, I don't know. I have not studied the bill. I have not studied the potentialities of it."

"It is not a question, I think, that can be settled by merely whether you are for or whether you are not for it. I am for the utilization of the total manpower that we have."

"But whether the program of universal military training all youths along practically the same line, which I understand is the point considered, whether that will reduce and produce [sic] the greatest military effectiveness, I would not attempt to say until I had studied the problem very, very thoroughly."

"I believe the greatest possible consideration has got to be given to the demands of industry. I believe that if you are going to prepare the youth, that you have got to understand that modern warfare has as its basis industry."

"I believe that you have got to understand that the money that is involved is not limitless; that you have got to get the maximum efficiency for every penny you spend."

"Now, I would not have the slightest hesitation in completely approving that, if I thought that was the best way to get the effectiveness. Now, at the present moment, of course, this is a future plan you are working on; at the present moment, as I understand it, it is not applicable. There are other and more acute demands."

"I should advise most seriously, if I were considering the problem, that I would wait and get through with the emergency that faces us now, and then on what has resulted and what exists then, I would sum up the facts, and make my decision. If Universal Military Training is the best way to do it, I would unhesitatingly advocate it. The question is the survival of the nation, and I believe it is every citizen's duty to give that need in time of necessity that is required by the nation."

Sen. Johnson. "General, do you have any recollection of ever having recommended or advocated universal training of our young men?"

Gen. MacArthur. "Oh, yes. I not only many years ago when I went to the Philippines requested the Philippine Government to try to organize it for the blow that was manifestly certain to come, but the first thing I did was to introduce universal military services as far as I was able to accomplish it."

Sen. Johnson. "I mean, as it applied to this nation."

Gen. MacArthur. "I am quite sure that twenty-five years ago had we had universal military service, the whole situation would have been different. It is my belief that had we been prepared before either of these World Wars, there was a very excellent chance that they would not have taken place."

"The only thing I address myself to, any doubts that I would have, is as to the efficacy on the military potential that the country could produce."

"Now, over in the Philippines, the situation was entirely different. They didn't produce anything; everything was supplied to them. What was necessary there was to get the manpower to use what was supplied to them; so, there was no question there that universal military service was the proper thing."

"Before the first World War, and the second World War, for that matter, industry hadn't assumed such an important part as it had now. I believe the thing should be carefully studied, Senator, after we get over this present crisis that exists; and, if the best method at that time is for universal military service, as producing the maximum efficiency—like Abou Ben Adhem, my name would lead all the rest."

Use of Rangers

Sen. Morse (R-Ore.). "General, did you, at any time, take any action to prevent the use of guerrilla warfare or sabotage activity behind the enemy's lines?"

General MacArthur. "No, sir, to the contrary, I encouraged it."

Sen. Morse. "Can you tell us, General, about when the American Rangers, guerrilla-trained fighters, were used in the Korean war?"

Gen. MacArthur. "My recollection is not entirely distinct on that, but I think we began to get the Ranger companies shortly, probably, after the Inchon landing."

Sen. Morse. "You weren't opposed to their use, were you?"

Gen. MacArthur. "Oh, I am one of the main exponents of Ranger use."

Sen. Morse. "Welcomed them with open arms, didn't you?"

Gen. MacArthur. "Oh, yes. Commando type of warfare, if it is used with intelligence, has the greatest possible efficiency, not only in what it actually does, but in the confusion and bewilderment that it creates in the enemy. As a psychological weapon, as well as an actual one, it has a very large place."

Gen. Walker and Almond

Sen. Morse. "It is alleged in some writings that we have read that at the time of the operation last November and December General Walker of the Eighth Army and General Almond of the Tenth Corps did not maintain communications between each other, but had to communicate through Tokyo, and orders were sent out to them from Tokyo in regard to the tactical operations that they were or should carry out in that operation. Is that true or false?"

Gen. MacArthur. "That is false. The coordination of these two forces was in my own hands. The Tenth Corps was an enveloping movement that was moving in to outflank the supply line of the remnants of the North Korean Army. But the liaison between the Eighth Army and the Tenth Corps was carried on by the normal processes and means, not only by planes, couriers, but by other means."

"There was as complete coordination as I have known between enveloping movements—much more coordination was there than I was able to get between the Pusan beachhead, the Eighth Army and the Tenth Corps when I put the Tenth Corps in at Inchon."

Sen. Morse. "There is no basis in fact, then, for the charge that General Walker and General Almond were not on speaking terms, as some of the articles said?"

Gen. MacArthur. "Ridiculous."

Sen. Morse. "I am glad to have that."

Gen. MacArthur. "And the officers were good friends. General Almond had been my Chief of Staff; General Walker commanded the Eighth Army for several years right out there, and their acquaintanceship lasted over, oh, 25 years."

SEC. MARSHALL'S TESTIMONY

Sec. Marshall. "I have a brief statement to make, but first I would like to observe that it is a very distressing necessity, a very distressing occasion, that compels me to appear here this morning and in effect in almost direct opposition to a great many of the views and actions of General MacArthur."

"He is a brother Army officer, a man for whom I have tremendous respect as to his military capabilities and military performances and, from all I can learn, as to his administration of Japan. . . .

"From the very beginning of the Korean conflict down to the present moment, there has been no disagreement between the President, the Secretary of Defense, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff that I am aware of."

"There have been, however, and continue to be basic difference of judgment between General MacArthur, on the one hand, and the President, the Secretary of Defense, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff, on the other hand. . . .

"As to the basic differences of judgment which exist between General MacArthur on the one hand, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Secretary of Defense and the President, on the other hand."

"Our objective in Korea continues to be the defeat of the aggression and the restoration of peace. We have persistently sought to confine the conflict to Korea and to prevent its spreading into a third world war. In this effort, we stand allied with the great majority of our fellow-members of the United Nations."

Results of Policy

"Our efforts have succeeded in thwarting the aggressions in Korea, and in stemming the tide of aggression in Southeast Asia and elsewhere throughout the world. Our efforts in Korea have given us some sorely needed time and impetus to accelerate the building (Please turn to Next Page) of our defenses and those of our allies against the threatened onslaught of Soviet imperialism.

"General MacArthur, on the other hand, would have us, on our own initiative, carry the conflict beyond Korea against the mainland of Communist China, both from the sea and from the air.

"He would have us accept the risk of involvement not only in an extension of the war with Red China but in an all-out war with the Soviet Union. He would have us do this even at the expense of losing our allies and wrecking the coalition of free peoples throughout the world. He would have us do this even though the effect of such action might expose Western Europe to attack by the millions of Soviet troops poised in Middle and Eastern Europe.

"This fundamental divergence is one of judgment as to the proper course of action to be followed by the United States.

"This divergence arises from the difference between the position of a field commander, whose mission is limited to a particular area and a particular antagonist, and the position of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Secretary of Defense and the President, who are responsible for the total security of the United States, and who, to achieve and maintain this security, must weigh our interests and objectives in one part of the globe with those in other areas of the world so as to attain the best overall balance.

"It is their responsibility to determine where the main threat to our security lies, where we must fight holding actions, and where and how we must gain time to grow stronger. On the other hand, the responsibilities and the courses of action assigned to a theatre commander necessarily apply to his own immediate area of responsibility.

"It is completely understandable and, in fact, at times commendable that a theatre commander should become so wholly wrapped up in his own aims and responsibilities that some of the directives received by him from higher authority are not those that he would have written for himself. There is nothing new about this sort of thing in our military history.

"What is new, and what has brought about the necessity for General MacArthur's removal, is the wholly unprecedented situation of a local theatre commander publicly expressing his displeasure at and his disagreement with the foreign and military policy of the United States.

Out of Sympathy

"It became apparent that General MacArthur had grown so far out of sympathy with the established policies of the United States that there was grave doubt as to whether he could any longer be permitted to exercise the authority in making decisions that normal command functions would assign to a theatre commander. In this situation, there was no other recourse but to relieve him."

(Sec. Marshall described the events surrounding Gen. MacArthur's statement of 24 March announcing he was ready to confer in the field with the enemy commander.)

"At the time the foregoing statement was issued, the clearance of the proposed Presidential declaration with the other thirteen nations having forces in Korea had very nearly been completed. In view of the serious impact of General MacArthur's statement on the negotiations with these nations, it became necessary to abandon the effort, thus losing whatever chance there may have been at that time to negotiate a settlement of the Korean conflict.

"A meeting was held at once by the Secretary of State and members of his staff, the Deputy Secretary of Defense, Mr. Lovett, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff, at which the matter was fully discussed.

Later in the same afternoon this group met with the President. As a result of this discussion the Joint Chiefs of Staff were directed by the President to call General MacArthur's attention to the President's order of Dec. 6, 1950, which, in effect, required that all officials of the U. S. Government, military as well as civilian, should not release any speech, press or other public statement concerning foreign policy without prior clearance by the Department of State, or if the Department of Defense.

"Shortly after General MacArthur's statement of March 24, Congressman Joseph Martin of Massachusetts released for publication a letter addressed to him by General MacArthur, dated March 20, 1951. In this letter, which like the March 24 release had not been cleared in accordance with the President's directive of Dec. 6, General MacArthur dealt further with the questions of whether to carry the war to China, whether to use the Nationalist Chinese forces on Formosa, and whether to apply our maximum strength in Asia or in Europe.

"This letter was brought to the attention of the President on April 5. Thereafter the President called a meeting of his special assistant, Mr. Averell Harriman, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense and General Bradley. No decision was taken at this meeting, but after full discussion the President requested that all records bearing on the subject be brought to his attention.

"On the following day, Saturday, this same group again met with the President at 8:50 in the morning for a further discussion of the subject. It was suggested that the matter be considered individually over the week-end. The President directed me as Secretary of Defense to secure the views of the Chiefs of Staff from a purely military point of view. Because two of the Chiefs were out of the city, they did not meet until the afternoon of the following day, Sunday, April 8.

JCS Recommendations

"Later that afternoon the three Chiefs of Staff met with me and General Bradley and stated their recommendations in the matter, based on purely military considerations. These recommendations were reported to the President by General Bradley at a meeting the next morning, Monday, April 9th, which was also attended by Mr. Harriman, the Secretary of State and myself.

"With the unanimous concurrence of all those present the President at that time took his decision to relieve General MacArthur.

"On Tuesday, the 10th, at 3 P. M., there was another meeting of the President with the same group to pass on the form of the message from the President to General MacArthur, the form of the orders to General Ridgway notifying him of his succession to command, and the form of the release advising the public of the action taken and the reasons therefor.

"Originally it was decided to transmit the notification to General MacArthur at 8 P. M., Washington time, on Wednesday, April 11, that is 10 A. M. Tokyo time. Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, then in Korea, was directed to make the delivery of the messages to General MacArthur at his residence, the Embassy, at the time indicated.

"However, late on Tuesday, April 10th, there were indications that the action to be taken had become known publicly, and it was then decided by the President to accelerate the transmission of the official notification to General MacArthur by approximately twenty hours. The exact timing of the public release was made so as to coincide with the arrival of the communication in Tokyo in mid afternoon.

"Mr. Pace in Korea incidentally did not receive his instructions due to a break-down in a power unit in Pusan."

Sen. Russell. "Mr. Secretary, this was a rather unusual procedure, for the relief of a military commander, as well as one who was a civilian director in Japan; and, in such a summary fashion. Was there any reason expressed in this conference as to why this summary action was taken to relieve the general, without an opportunity, as he states, to give a farewell message to his troops."

Procedure for Relief

Sec. Marshall. "Let me answer it this way, Mr. Chairman:

"There was considerable discussion as to the procedure for his relief, and for that—and in that, the decision was reached that it should be carried out by an official of the Government, of some stature; and Mr. Pace, being in Korea, he was designated to do this, and he was specifically instructed to make the appointment to see General MacArthur at the Embassy, his home, and not at his office; and at a time before he went to his office for his daily business.

"Now as to the immediacy of the situation in regard to his feelings as being expressed in the press releases by him, it seemed to give indication this would be a cumulative affair and might be still more serious.

"I don't recall discussions of that by me and I do not feel that I should endeavor to interpret for other men who will be before you.

"The question of his opportunity for the farewell to his command was not discussed, as I recall. The necessity for his immediate relief, I think, was felt by all concerned. The issue was getting too complicated to go on, considering the tremendous importance of the events then in progress."

Sen. Russell. "Do you mind elaborating on that just a bit, as to why it was becoming so complicated that a day or two could not have intervened for the regular procedure of the relief of a high-ranking officer from his command might be followed?"

Sec. Marshall. "The situation was going to be exceedingly difficult for General Ridgway, and our thoughts had to go to General Ridgway and the tremendous problem he was going to have on his hands both in Korea and in Japan, particularly there in relation to the treaty discussions that were then under way.

"Just what would have developed in connection with the procedure of relief, which was named for some date ahead, we will say specifically for General MacArthur to take leave of his command would also involve the reactions that would be set up that might be decidedly to the disadvantage of General Ridgway, whom we have to look to to carry out the campaign in Korea and the responsibilities in Japan.

"I don't know that that thought went through the minds of the others, and I don't know that I analyzed it in my own mind at the time.

"My reaction was that it was necessary to relieve General MacArthur immediately."

Gen. Eisenhower

Sen. Bridges (R-N. H.). "General Marshall, while we had the issue up of military aid to Europe, troops to Europe, and so forth, it was pointed out by various people including yourself that you had to have faith in the military leaders, you had to have faith in the Supreme Commander in Europe, General Eisenhower.

"For instance, you made the statement, and I quote:

"As a result of the various steps outlined earlier, these plans are now well advanced. General Eisenhower, as you know, has assumed supreme command. In order for him to succeed in this most difficult and critical of assignments, it is essential that he not be deprived of that freedom of action which is so necessary to a military commander."

"That is a pretty straightforward statement, general, and General Eisenhower in Europe and the need for faith in our Supreme Commanders in a given area and the necessity for them to have freedom of action—that was your thought as far as Europe was concerned.

"Don't you think that should apply equally to the Far East?"

Sec. Marshall. "If the circumstances were the same and the men were the same. I have great regard for General MacArthur's military capabilities. In fact, I played a very large part in his various assignments, promotions, and decorations; but when it comes to the point of the Commander not recognizing, being unwilling to recognize the decisions of his Government, that is quite another matter.

"General Eisenhower has been restricted at times in his operations, particularly during the last war, but there was no repercussion resulting from that. There was discussion and decision and that ended the matter.

"I do not think the comparison is quite a fair one, sir."

Marshall as Secretary

Sen. Bridges. "General Marshall, was Louis Johnson's removal as Secretary of Defense and your succeeding him as Secretary of Defense, did that have anything to do with the conduct of the Korean war? I mean was the Korean war involved in that, his removal and your succession?"

Sec. Marshall. "Well, I suppose it was involved, but not as a reason for the change that I know of. I was called in there and then I went about the business in the same way I had heretofore, such administrative business.

"I think the only major change I made immediately was to authorize, require very general backs and forths informally, discussions with the working staffs which had not been the case prior to my arrival there."

Sen. Reynolds. "What do you mean by the 'working staff'?"

Sec. Marshall. "Well, if the Chiefs of Staff are involved in something that has relationship to the world picture and matters of that sort, this problem is always turned over to the group under the Chiefs of Staff to get all of the facts spread out and to make a proposal for an attitude or decision by the Chiefs of Staff.

"The Chiefs of Staff then take that and maybe two or three days on it, but in getting this preparatory paper, it was very important in my opinion that they be free to discuss for instance, with the State Department, to go over or bring the State Department in in the lower echelons to discuss these things so that we didn't get on a basis of trying to handle the thing all in the form of a memorandum over there and then a memorandum from over there back to us on the highest level."

On Status of Officers

Sec. Marshall. "I feel that when you take a commission and you take your oath of office under that, you accept in the military service, because of the state of loyalty, you have to feel towards your respective commanders, as you go up in the military hierarchy, which is very compelling to any effective army force and military force and, therefore, that you have to accept those inhibitions if you undertake that type of career.

"It does not apply to a lawyer or an industrialist, a man in political life, such as yourself, but it does apply. In my opinion, very directly to an individual with a commission in the Army, Navy, the Air Force or in the Marine Corps.

"There has come to be built up the feeling that when an officer retires, he is a free agent, and that, I think, is more or less accepted. I have no comments on that. I never went into the various backs and forths concerned with it; but that is, I think, a common reaction that once a man is retired, he is a free agent and can step out and say what he feels.

"So long as he holds his post of military nature, he is not that same free agent that he otherwise would be.

"I recall in the days of Mr. Wilson there was a considerable difficulty in connection with General Wood, who was quite a conspicuous character in the military service. He was Governor of Cuba, Governor General in the Philippines, and as a military leader. In that particular case General Wood was not relieved, but they subdivided the entire Eastern Department, which extended from Maine to Florida, into three pieces in order to locate him in Charleston or out of the country.

"Then his career was very seriously interfered with thereafter, because he was a man of great military competence, in my opinion; and he was a great administrator, in my opinion; but he had virtually defied his Commander in Chief on what was the appropriate policy.

"I didn't agree with the defiance, but as a young officer, I was in agreement with the difference.

"Mr. Wilson was considering the whole world, he was considering American public reactions, and finally came out with his proposal to Congress that we declare war.

"General Wood was, in effect, denied service that he might have rendered in a large way in that war by virtue of, by reason of these acts.

"There have been other cases in our history, very much along the same line. I suppose there will continue to be, but I think they are very poor examples to the Army; unless the man takes off the mantle of command and steps out and states his views."

Sen. Bridges. "Now, general, for a minute assuming in World War II, where you served with distinction as Chief of Staff of the United States Army, you had felt that a policy enunciated by the Administration at that time was not in the best interests of the United States, you felt very strongly then about that, what would you have done?"

Sec. Marshall. "I would have done my best, directed to the President, to have it changed, and I might say I had some very difficult scenes with Mr. Roosevelt over certain phases of the matter because, naturally, he had a great many irons in the fire and I only had one, which was the Army and the Air Corps, but I didn't make any public speeches.

"I was frequently embarrassed here before the Congress and committees as to the questions, because I thought it was ruinous, I honestly thought it was ruinous for me to come out in opposition to my Commander in Chief.

"I must find some other way to accomplish the end, and in most instances I was able to do so. In some, I was not. Some, later, it seemed to me the President was right. Others, I thought it was convincingly proved that I was right, but I had very difficult scenes in the early stages, particularly when we were building up our forces, but I had them with the President directly and I was not a very cheerful visitor on many occasions. In the end, Mr. Roosevelt gave me his confidence and we had no discussions and debates whatsoever."

"I don't mean that an army officer is an absolute mummy, in a sense that he can't speak, he hasn't any view, or when he gets to the card table, he is absolutely mum, and things of that sort.

"I think these factors—we are dealing with a Commander in Chief, a Supreme Commander, technically, and Commander in Chief of our military forces, and also, in effect, the Commander in Chief for the United Nations forces."

"You preach loyalty all the time. You are dealing with an organization where a man receives an order from even a captain which leads to his death or his wound, and he has to obey that order. He doesn't abate it, he obeys it, and that has to be instinctive. Now, if the example at the top is contrary to that, then you have got a very serious situation."

"I am reminded now of a criticism that was brought to me regarding myself shortly after I became Chief of Staff, and the criticism was to this general effect: That I was giving my support to the then Secretary of War, Mr. Woodring, and not giving it to others.

"Now, my reply. I remember distinctly, was this: When the Chief of Staff of the Army sets an example to the whole Army by disloyalty to his chief and superior, who is the Secretary of War, he has just about ruined the Army. In my opinion."

Cites Gen. Pershing

"I will give you an example of what I am talking about.

"I recall General Pershing telling me of his own experience. In the first place, he was suddenly ordered to conduct an operation into Mexico, and I think he went some 600 miles into Mexico in the effort to capture Villa.

"In the first place, he was barred from using the railroad. We had no motor truck organizations in that day, and they just had to buy trucks and organize and do the best they could to carry tremendous supplies over these tremendous distances, in many cases there being no trails. He was barred from using the railroads. That was the most severe prohibition that could be placed on

Regular Army Nominations

The President has sent to the Senate a list of Regular Army nominations in the Judge Advocate General's Corps, Medical Corps, Dental Corps and Veterinary Corps, as follows.

The President noted in sending the names to the Senate that the promotion of two officers are subject both to physical and professional examinations required by law which could not be fulfilled because one of the officers, Clarence LeR. Anderson, is missing in action and the other, Alexander M. Boysen, is a prisoner of war.

disagreement in the committee and there is now an understanding that when the bill comes up on the floor of the Senate this amendment will be withdrawn.

The text of the amendment the committee supports is as follows:

"(b) In addition to recommending those officers whom it considers fully qualified for temporary appointment to higher grades, such a board shall also report, from among the officers whose names are presented to it for consideration, the names of any officers of the active list of less than twenty years' service whose records in its opinion indicate their unsatisfactory performance of duty in their present grades and in its opinion indicate that they would not satisfactorily perform the duties of a higher grade. Officers holding permanent appointments on the active list of the Regular Navy or Marine Corps in the grades of warrant officer and above whose names are so reported shall, except as hereinafter provided, be honorably discharged from the naval service on the first day of the fourth month following that in which their names are thus reported with a lump-sum payment computed on the basis of two months' active duty pay at time of discharge for each year of commissioned service computed in accordance with subsection 102 (d) of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended, for line officers and subsection 202 (d) of that Act for staff officers, but not to exceed a total of one year's active duty pay. No such officer who is under consideration for, or undergoing disciplinary action of any kind shall be separated from the naval service prior to the final disposition of his case and he shall thereafter without delay be separated from the naval service pursuant to this subsection or other provisions of law, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. An officer holding permanent appointment as a commissioned warrant or warrant officer and serving temporarily in a higher grade, or an officer designated for limited duty who when appointed for the performance of limited duty only held a permanent appointment as a commissioned warrant or warrant officer, whose name is so reported shall, in lieu of such honorable discharge from the naval service, have the option of reverting to the grade and status he would have held had he not been so appointed. An officer designated for limited duty who when appointed for the performance of limited duty only held a permanent rating below warrant officer, whose name is so reported shall, in lieu of such honorable discharge from the naval service, have the option of reverting to the grade and status he would have held had he not been so appointed and instead had been appointed a warrant officer. In any computation to determine the grade and status to which such officers may revert, all of their active service as an officer designated for limited duty or as a temporary or reserve officer shall be included."

The text of the Committee's report:

"The purpose of the legislation is to give the President authority to set aside certain requirements of the Navy and Marine Corps sections of the Officer Personnel Act which will bring them in line with Army and Air Force provisions during such periods of time as the needs of the service dictate but before a declaration of national emergency or war.

"Under existing law the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended, can be set aside in certain of its features during periods of national emergency or war. During such times temporary promotions can be made in the Navy and in the Marine Corps. However, though temporary promotions are being made, the selection for permanent rank continues and officers who twice fail of selection must be separated from the active service. Many of these officers are well qualified to perform duties during emergencies and only fail of selection because of so-called 'forced attrition' within the Navy and Marine Corps selection system. For example, if this bill is not enacted, approximately 300 qualified officers will be separated as of June 30 of this year. If separated, they will have to be replaced, probably by Reserves ordered to duty on an involuntary basis.

"The committee noted during the hearings that if this authority were granted, it would also require the retention on active duty of some officers who were not qualified. The Navy Department was requested to furnish language which would require the separation of officers who were not qualified to carry out their assignments, even though the balance of the officers in their group who failed of selection might be retained on the active rolls. The committee feels strongly that the authority requested by the Navy to retain qualified persons passed over during emergency should not be enacted unless the bill also separates those who are not qualified.

"Another change in existing law provides that the President may suspend the operation of any or all of the provisions of title III of the Officer Personnel Act insofar as it applies to officers in grade of lieutenant (junior grade) and lieutenant. Under existing law certain temporary features of the Officer Personnel Act terminate when the number of him. I don't think he ever made a public comment; he assured me he had not.

"It went further than that. Just as he thought he was going to effect the capture of Villa, he received a communication to cease his efforts and retire, which meant he failed in his business. He told me he didn't mention that to any of his staff, and that he walked around his tent, and around the bivouac there most of the night, and gave the order the next morning for the beginning of the withdrawal without any explanation whatever to anybody concerned. That was his reaction from a military basis to Mr. Wilson's prohibition and to Mr. Wilson's orders.

"I think it was a very good model to follow in the Army."

Strategic Air Power

The Strategic Air Force, in the opinion of Secretary Thomas K. Finletter is the "single most important factor" in stopping Communist aggression.

This was stated by Mr. Finletter in a Dumont Television Network broadcast on 6 May. He maintained the B-36 and the medium bomber "are capable of an attack which is so serious . . . that I believe that it is causing those enemies to think several times before they move anywhere in the world."

Secretary Finletter commented as follows on the contribution of Russian airplanes to the Chinese Air Force:

"The North Korean Air Force was an unimportant air force from the very beginning.

Army Navy Air Force Journal 1033 12 May 1951

However, there have been substantial additions to that North Korean Air Force and to the Chinese Communist Air Force, and those can come from only one source. The MIG-15 is not built in China. It is a Russian plane and so are the other planes which the Chinese Communists are using at the present time. I don't feel justified in giving you exact estimates as to the number of those planes that are now there with the Chinese, but I can say this to you. They are very important, and the Chinese Air Force with what is left of the North Korean Air Force constitutes a substantial potential threat to the United Nations Air. Up to the present time we have had complete air superiority. Whether we will have it in the future depends upon the actions of other people."

Military Pay

tax subsequent to enactment of the Career Compensation Act has resulted in a decrease in take-home pay of military personnel not contemplated by the Hook Commission, concurrent with the increase in the cost of living.

In connection with Mr. Van Zandt's bill, the proposed pay increase for the Government's civilian employees—6.9 per cent is the reported raise under consideration—undoubtedly will bring forth widespread support for a similar pay hike for military personnel.

Thus, there are now three possible avenues leading to a military pay raise:

1. Congressman Van Zandt's bill.
2. The pay raise proposal for civilian employees.

3. Congressman Kilday's much-discussed omnibus bill of amendments to the Career Compensation Act.

Late this week, it appeared that the second possibility, the pay raise for Government civilian employees, might be the most likely approach for an across-the-board military pay increase. Reportedly, the Administration has given approval to a pay boost for civilian employees and it is not readily conceivable that such an increase would be granted without a pay raise for military personnel, who have suffered a disproportionately high cost of living increase as a result of the current emergency.

Mr. Van Zandt's Statement

Following is the complete text of Representative Van Zandt's statement, made on 7 May.

"I have just introduced H. R. 3991 to provide that the basic pay of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of our Armed Forces should be regulated in accordance with the cost of living index compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor.

"The bill provides that the President shall examine annually on May 15th the status of the cost of living index in relation to the pay scale as established by Congress October 1, 1949. Whenever the President finds that the cost of living index has risen above or fallen below the cost of living index of October 1, 1949 in excess of three percent, an adjustment in the basic pay of all members of the Armed Services shall be made as of July 1st of the calendar year in which such determination is made. In other words, the adjustment in pay scales is not retroactive.

"When Congress passed the Career Compensation Act of 1949 and made it effective October 1, 1949, it represented the results of a comprehensive study by Congress and a similar study by an all-civilian commission appointed by the Secretary of Defense in 1947 and commonly called the Hook Commission.

"It was found by the Hook Commission after an exhaustive research into wages paid by industry of comparable jobs and taking into consideration the economic condition of the country during the summer of 1949 that the pay scales for ranks and grades of our Armed Forces were away out of line and needed adjustment. As a result, the Hook Commission presented to Congress pay scales that it felt were fair and equitable to all concerned. In submitting its recommendations the Hook Commission informed Congress that it felt that the spread of the pay scale was as sound at that time as it was possible to make it. At the same time, it was pointed out that as the country's economic condition changed from time to time, a flat percentage increase or decrease across the board to all concerned should be applied to pay and allowances so as not to upset the spread of pay scales as finally agreed upon.

Previous Recommendations Cut

"Before Congress enacted into law the recommendations of the Hook Commission, it followed the cost of living index and reduced the proposed officers' base pay 5% and enlisted personnel's base pay by two percent. Subsistence allowance was also reduced by $3.00. In other words before the recommendations could be written into law the cost of living dropped with the result that the proposed pay scales were adjusted accordingly.

"Since the Career Compensation Act of 1949 was approved by Congress, there has been a considerable change in the economic condition of the country. The cost of living index published monthly by the Department of Labor shows a decided upward swing since the fall of 1949. The following comparison between the index of August 1949 and February 1951 plainly shows the status of the take home pay of the members of the military services in regard to the economic position of the country.

TABLE
(Furnished by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the U. S. Dept. of Labor)

	Over-all	Food	Apparel	Rent	Fuel, Elec., Refrig.	House Furnishings	Misc.
Aug. 1949	168.8	202.6	187.4	120.8	135.8	184.8	154.8
Feb. 1951	183.8	226.0	202.0	134.0	143.9	209.7	163.2
Percentage Rise ..	11.6%		7.8%	11.0%	6.0%	13.5%	10.5%

"A study of the above table reveals that since the enactment of the Career Compensation Act of 1949, the over-all average cost of living increase is 9% according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the U. S. Department of Labor.

"Keeping in mind that military personnel are located by and large in congested areas the cost of living percentages would reflect even greater changes for them because of shortages of housing, etc., which tend to increase rates due to the congested area conditions. Then, too, frequent moves of the service family tend to cause their expenses for house furnishings to be greater than the average, when they have to more frequently set up housekeeping in new locations. This factor also influences the miscellaneous category which shows an increase of 10.5%.

"When taking into consideration these additional factors one can readily see that the over-all cost of living increase for service personnel could be estimated in the neighborhood of 10% to 12% for the categories listed above.

"Practically all forms of transportation, both local and national, have increased a great deal in cost during this period. A major point the Hook Commission took into consideration in their study was the Armed Forces income tax exemption which was repealed effective 1 January 1949. The commission took this loss of exemption into account so that no member of the Armed Forces actually took a cut in his over-all salary. Since the enactment of the Career Compensation Act, the withholding tax rate for federal income tax has been increased from fifteen to eighteen per cent. This results in a decrease in the take-home pay not contemplated by the Hook Commission, while at the same time the cost of living has steadily increased.

"It is common knowledge that the cost of living index is used as a pattern for the pay of personnel in private industry and on that basis several pay increases have been granted since 1949. Yet to date no consideration has been given to living expenses of military personnel.

"I hope that my bill, H. R. 3991, will receive immediate consideration by Congress so that those men and women who serve in our Armed Forces will be given the same consideration as accorded those who work in private industry."

Air Engineering

tion in early 1952. Being built from a much modernized and expanded German jet engine test plant acquired after World War II, this huge facility will make possible the full scale testing of ram-jet as well as turbo-jet engines under present and future development. Conditions within this laboratory can be simulated up to flight altitudes as high as 80,000 feet. The compressor-exhaustion system will require about 75,000 horsepower to operate, pointing up one of the chief reasons why the Center is being built in mid-Tennessee, near the heart of the TVA's giant power distribution system.

Also begun this spring are several important supporting facilities. They include a large permanent-type warehouse, an administration and engineering office building, an underground utilities system, and a large earth-fill, concrete dam intended to back up a 12-mile-long cooling water reservoir. Other buildings to be constructed include a model shop, an instrument shop, a fire-police-communications center, an automotive repair shop, a reception building, a steam generating plant and an installation maintenance shop. An industrial dispensary and a cafeteria are also to be started soon, rounding out the construction program at this time.

Of the three major testing facilities, each a tremendous undertaking in itself, the second priority item is a gas dynamics facility, still in the design stage, although much of its equipment is presently on order. This facility will be able to test developmental models of aircraft and guided missiles and their components through the supersonic and into the hypersonic (more than Mach 5) ranges, at very high Reynolds' numbers.

This hypersonic wind tunnel will employ an extremely flexible compressor system driven by electric motors totaling 90,000 horsepower. It will incorporate two test sections 40 by 40 inches in size, each equipped with adjustable nozzles. The major feature of this tunnel will be its usefulness from the standpoint of aerodynamic development of very high speed aircraft, since the maximum Reynolds' numbers attainable are fairly constant throughout the Mach number range, making conditions within the tunnel comparable to the flight conditions of full-scale supersonic aircraft and missiles.

The third principal test unit scheduled for construction at the Arnold Center is the propulsion wind tunnel. It is being designed for developmental testing of full scale, operating ram-jet and turbo-jet power plants as they may be installed in missiles and aircraft, as well as full scale components of aircraft and missiles. Wind speeds attained in this tunnel will extend from the high subsonic well into the supersonic range.

The outstanding feature of this tunnel is its compressor-drive system. Housing the largest piece of rotating equipment of its kind ever built, a tremendous multi-stage compressor system, the propulsion wind tunnel will require over 200,000 horsepower to operate, a power demand comparable to a city the size of Nashville, Tennessee.

Temperature control for the propulsion wind tunnel will require great quantities of cooling water—about 100,000 gallons per minute, a rate equal to that of a city the size of Washington, D. C. This will be pumped in from the nearby cooling reservoir, formed by the dam on the Elk River.

It is apparent that with the full-fledged operational status of the Air Research and Development Command on 15 May, the AEDD will, in all probability, become a major part of that organization. Its immediate responsibilities, however, are to obtain the ultimate in design of the testing facilities and to direct and supervise the construction of the Arnold Engineering Development Center, here at Tullahoma, Tennessee.

Navy Personnel

line officers holding permanent appointments on the active list of the Regular Navy equals 95 per cent of their total officers authorized by law, or on January 1, 1957, whichever is the earlier. At the time this section was passed the long-range planning for the Navy envisioned a small Navy with practically all officers being Regulars. However, recent events show clearly the Navy will for some time be considerably larger than originally contemplated and must have on active duty a great many Reserves. It is necessary that this section of the law be amended to provide some flexibility within their officer structure under present emergency conditions. Also, subsection 1 (c) of the bill takes away certain of the existing limitations so that there can be a more flexible distribution of officers in grade. This will permit the ordering of Reserve officers to duty in such grades without restrictions brought about by permanent laws designed to arbitrarily keep a certain number of officers in a particular grade.

"Subsection (d) permits flexibility in the making of computations to determine how many officers will be needed in each grade. At the present time the law requires a single computation to be made as of January 1 of each year. In view of the constantly readjusting situation within the Navy and Marine Corps at the moment authority is needed to permit them to make new computations as the needs of the service indicate.

"Section 2 of the act provides that temporary promotions made under the authority of this act be made only upon the recommendation of selection boards. It is contemplated that the same procedures will be followed for temporary promotions as now apply to permanent promotions under peacetime law. It was this section that was amended to provide that officers not qualified who fall of selection be separated from the service.

"The committee views all of these changes in the light of improving the flexibility of a promotion plan which was designed primarily for normal peacetime usage. The one basic change in policy is the one which permits the retention of qualified officers even though they fall of selection. Testimony before the committee adduced the fact that this was not intended to indicate that the Navy was attempting to abandon its so-called forced attrition which is used under normal conditions. It was also pointed out that in higher ranks this forced attrition was not bothering them at the present time.

"This bill as introduced has the full support of the Department of Defense and the Bureau of the Budget. The amendments referred to above are believed to be extremely desirable from the standpoint of the committee and if they are not included the committee would not recommend favorable consideration of the bill."

The Committee also reported the bill (S. 1039) to amend the provisions of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947 relating to the composition of boards for the recommendations of rear admirals of the Navy for continuation on the active list.

In explanation of the Bill the Committee stated:

"Under existing law all admirals of the Navy and generals of the Marine Corps are required after a certain number of years of service and time in grade to be selected for retention until they reach the prescribed statutory retirement age. The present law requires that all the officers on the selection board be senior in rank to those officers being considered for retention. Not infrequently admirals hold temporary rank in excess of their permanent rank, such as for instance, the Chief of Naval Operations who is a temporary admiral, but a permanent rear admiral. Therefore, it has been necessary to use retired officers in order to meet the requirement that the members of the selection board be senior in rank.

"Section 1 (a) of this bill provides that members of selection boards shall be senior in permanent rank only. The effect of this change will be to permit the use of officers senior in permanent rank, but who might be junior in temporary rank.

"Section 1 (b) permits the use by the Marine Corps of retired personnel on their selection board. At the present time the Navy may use retired officers but the Marine Corps cannot. The effect of the present law has been to require the Marine Corps on occasion to use admirals on their selection board to consider the retention of Marine generals.

"According to testimony introduced before the committee these two changes will facilitate the convening of selection boards and are recommended by the Navy and Marine Corps and the Department of Defense. There will be no additional cost to the Government as a result of this legislation and the Bureau of the Budget interposes no objection to its enactment."

Senate Committee Staff

Mr. William H. Darden, who served in the Supply Corps of the Navy during the war, has been appointed Chief Clerk of the Senate Armed Services Committee. He succeeds Mr. J. Nelson Tribby.

Mr. Darden, a native of Georgia, has been secretary to Senator Russell (D-Ga.), chairman of the Committee. Mr. Darden entered the Navy in 1943, being commissioned an ensign from the Navy Supply Corps School of Harvard University. He was released in 1946 as a lieutenant, junior grade.

Col. Justice M. Chambers, USMC-Ret., who has been a member of the committee's professional staff for more than four years, left this week to become assistant administrator of Civilian Defense.

Enlisted Promotions

The Army this week released two sets of comprehensive regulations pertaining to promotion of enlisted personnel and a third regulation relating to demotions.

SR 615-25-40, 2 May, relates to enlisted promotions in general, while SR 615-25-50, also dated 2 May, pertains to promotions during periods of rapid expansion.

Reductions of enlisted personnel is the subject of SR 615-25-55, 2 May, which states that enlisted personnel will not be reduced below grade E-2 except as the result of courts-martial sentence or upon discharge from service as undesirable.

Reassign Two Generals

The Air Force has announced the assignment of Maj. Gen. Kenneth P. Mc-Naughton as Vice Commander of the Air Training Command, effective 1 June.

He will replace Maj. Gen. Robert W.
Burns, who is being assigned to USAF
Headquarters.

Formerly head of the Directorate of Training in USAF Headquarters, General McNaughton was appointed on 1
March as Special Assistant to the Deputy Chief of Staff, Personnel, USAF Headquarters. He has been monitoring all civilian school contract matters for the Air Force since that time.

Lt. Gen. Robert W. Harper is Commanding General of the Air Training Command, Headquarters of the Command are at Scott AFB, Belleville, Ill.

OCS Class Graduates

One hundred and two men were commissioned as reserve officers of the Army
5 May when the Army General School at Fort Riley, Kans. graduated Army Officer Candidate Class No. 29.

Brig. Gen. L. D. Carter, acting commandant of the Army General School, introduced Col. Hiram E. Tuttle, retired, who addressed the new officers.

Honor graduate was 2d Lt. Phillip W.
Inman who received his diploma, trophy and insignia from General Carter. Military stakes winner was 2d Lt. James C.
Treadway.

New Tandem Gear for C-119

A tandem-type gear installation has been developed and tested by the Fairchild Aircraft Division, Hagerstown, Md., to provide C-119 Packets with a wider landing "footprint" to increase their utilization for landing on unprepared fields with rough sod or soft surfaces. Air Materiel Command has awarded a contract to Fairchild for the modification of four sets of gears as a development project.

The experimental gear resembles the one currently used on production models of the C-119 in that it consists of the same essential strut arrangement. However, in place of the axle carrying two side-by-side wheels, a truck has been mounted on a pivotal fitting on the main oleo strut which carries four wheels, slightly smaller than those used on the present production version of the Packet.

An added feature of the gear is a cable and air cylinder which combine to keep the two front wheels slightly higher with respect to the runway or other landing surface than the rear wheels, when the gear is fully extended. On landing, the rear wheels strike first, and as the oleo strut is compressed by the weight of the plane settling to the runway, slack in the cable permits the front wheels to rock forward on their pivotal hinge and settle down on the runway. This feature provides a softer landing since weight is dispersed gradually on all landing surfaces.

Build Water Tunnel

The Navy announced this week that its civil engineers are completing the largest water tunnel in the Pacific Islands to assure an adequate water supply for Pearl Harbor and nearby Honolulu. The tunnel is at Wajawa Gulch, a hilly area in the central part of the island of Oahu.

The job of digging the tunnel started almost two years ago. When completed it will be capable of supplying 45,000,000 gallons of fresh water a day for the 180,000 military and civilian population.

Critical Housing Areas

The cities of Colorado Springs, Colo., and Corona, Calif., have been declared critical areas for defense housing, it was announced by Ralph R. Kaul, Chairman of the Critical Areas Committee of the Defense Production Administration.

The action provides the basis for relaxation of Federal credit controls on housing by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and the Housing and Home Finance Agency to assist in the provision of 1,000 new housing units in Colorado Springs and 150 new housing units in Corona.

In announcing certification of the two areas, Mr. Kaul said additional housing in Colorado Springs is needed to support urgent and essential Air Force activities. Additional housing for Corona is needed for persons employed at the new Guided Missiles Laboratory of the National Bureau of Standards.

New Firefighting Methods

As a result of ten years of research and development, the Naval Research Laboratory of the Office of Naval Research has announced new methods of fire extinguishment where oil and gasoline fuels are handled in large quantities.

These methods use mechanically produced foams containing air, water, and protein solutions as extinguishing and protecting agents.

Working in cooperation with engineers of the Bureau of Ships, the Naval Research Laboratory recently completed the redesign of large-capacity piped foam systems aboard U. S. aircraft carriers. Instantaneous operation of these systems, which have been battle-proven in the Korean conflict, is possible through reliable push-button remote control, which puts the entire apparatus in motion in just 12 seconds.

Canada-U. S. Coordination

Recommendation for the establishment by Canada and the United States of a joint body to coordinate their defense mobilization programs was made this week by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States following a meeting of the Canada-United States Committee maintained by the U. S. National Chamber and the Canadian chamber.

The committee recalled the statement of principles made last October by the two governments proposing coordination and said in a report prepared for the boards of directors of the two national organizations:

"This committee views with concern difficulties that have emerged in implementing the principles put forward at that time. It deplores particularly the failure to develop a coordinated program of requirements, production and procurement, and calls attention to the fact that Canadian purchases of defense equipment currently exceed by ten to one those being made by the United States in Canada.

"The committee recommends that a joint body be established immediately with full authority to implement the principles of the October declaration with particular regard to:

"(1) Development of a joint continental plan of defense production.

"(2) Effectuation of a more balanced relationship in the reciprocal purchase of defense equipment as between the two countries."

The board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States has approved the committee report, which will be submitted to the Canadian Chamber's board later.

Sub Test Facility

Culminating a three-year effort to provide the Navy with a testing facility for new types of submarine propulsion, a construction contract for $1,277,400 has been awarded to Cramer-Vollmerhausen, Inc., of Washington, D. C. The new Submarine Propulsion Test Facilities will be an addition to the U. S. Naval Engineering Experiment Station, Annapolis, Md., whose mission is to test and develop engineering equipment for use in the Fleet.

Four acres of shallow water adjacent to the Engineering Experiment Station have been filled to provide space for the new facility. This was accomplished economically by dredging the Worthington Basin and the Severn River out to the main ship channel, and using the dredged material for fill.

All-Temperature Grease

A new grease which performs equally as well in tropic heat or Arctic cold has been adopted for use on all Army vehicles and artillery pieces.

The all-temperature lubricant, developed by the Army Ordnance Corps, is expected to simplify the Army's supply problem by replacing at least six different greases. It is the result of extensive tests, conducted over the past three years, which started with "Operation Greaseball." The operation involved a convoy of twelve 2½ ton Army trucks which left Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., in August 1948 and covered 20,000 miles of driving in varying climates.

C-124 Lifts Record Load

The Air Force's Douglas C-124 Globemaster II has flown with a maximum weight of 210,000 pounds including a payload of over 70,000 pounds—the heaviest load ever lifted by a production transport airplane—on a routine test mission from Edwards AFB, Calif., the Air Force announced on 10 May.

The test, in which design take-off gross weight was exceeded by 35,000 pounds, was made under standard aircraft characteristic conditions to determine maximum load carrying capabilities of the Air Force's largest operational cargo and troop carrier.

The C-124 carried more than 70,000 pounds of simulated cargo for 1000 miles, unloaded, and returned to its home base without refueling. The tests show that, although the C-124 was designed for an operating radius of 1000 miles with a 50,000-pound payload at a gross weight of 175,000 pounds, it is capable of achieving such a radius with a payload of more than 70,000 pounds at a gross weight of 210,000 pounds.

Under normal conditions the C-124 is capable of carrying fully-assembled light tanks, guns, trucks and other heavy ground force equipment, as well as general cargo, troops, or combination loads.

The test flight was made under the supervision of the Flight Test Section, Air Materiel Command, with Maj. T. J. Cecil, piloting the aircraft.

Army Ord. Man Joins Firm

Mr. Marc Resek, vice-president and director of engineering, Perfection Stove Co., Cleveland, Ohio, has announced the appointment of Mr. William M. Day as chief engineer of the company. Mr. Day came to Perfection in 1945 and has been assistant chief engineer since January, 1947.

For five years before coming with the company, Mr. Day was in military service, serving as an automotive development engineer for two years and heading the Army's winterization development program for three years in the Office, Chief of Ordnance, Detroit, Mich.

Col. Lear to CAP Post

Col. William P. Lear, chairman of the Board, Lear, Inc., and a Collier Trophy winner, has been appointed advisor to the national commander of Civil Air Patrol in the fields of communications and electronics.

As an advisor to Maj. Gen. Lucas V. Beau, National Commander of CAP, Colonel Lear will provide counsel and guidance to the administration of CAP's short-wave radio network of more than 7,000 stations. Colonel Lear's son, William P., Jr., is a jet fighter pilot in the Air Force.

Auto Firm's Defense Report

President Hugh J. Ferry of the Packard Motor Car Company, reporting earnings of $2,499,973 during the first three months of 1951, disclosed that military business now exceeds $250,000,000.

Mr. Ferry said, however, that work was progressing on schedule with the company's two major defense assignments for diesel engines for the Navy and a volume of General Electric's J-47 turbojet engines for the Air Force.

Marine Corps Bill

ber of the JCS may win Presidential approval.

Backers of the bill in the House of Representatives are preparing to press for action, but there is some division as to whether to seek to restore to the bill the original provision for full JCS membership by the Marine Commandant or to accept the bill as it comes from the Senate. Representative Devereux (R-Md), retired Marine Corps brigadier general and hero of Wake Island, told THE JOURNAL that he feels it will be necessary to accept the Senate compromise. Representative Van Zandt (R-Pa), however, declares that the Commandant should be a voting member of the JCS and he will fight to that end. Representative Shafer (R-Mich) likewise declared that the Marine Corps must have "all the power possible in the JCS."

When the bill was reached in the Senate there was only the following discussion before approval:

Senator Kefauver (D-Tenn): "Mr. President, this bill would make a good compromise between the points of view with reference to the Marine Corps. Section 2 has been rewritten in such a way as not to give the Commandant of the Marine Corps a vote with the Joint Chiefs of Staff, but on matters which pertain to the Marine Corps he would have an opportunity of being heard and of filing supporting memoranda for the consideration of the Secretary of Defense."

"It then provides four full strength combat divisions for the Marine Corps. The evidence shows that they are needed, and that this fire power can be obtained through the marines more economically than in any other way. The bill, sponsored by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Douglas], has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Armed Services. If there are questions, I shall be glad to yield."

Senator Douglas (D-Ill): "Mr. President, as the eminent junior Senator from Tennessee has stated, the bill fixes the floor under the strength of the Marine Corps at four full combat divisions, with four supporting air wings and allied service troops and organizations. It provides, however, that there shall not be more than 400,000 men in the Marine Corps, and thus fixes a ceiling to the Marine Corps. It is anticipated that 4 full divisions will be supplied, with a total of approximately 300,000 men, so the floor is 300,000 men. The ceiling is 400,000."

"The compromise on the second section is that instead of the Commandant of the Marine Corps being a full-fledged member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, he is to be a consultant member. The bill was introduced by 44 members of the United States Senate, and was reported unanimously by the Armed Services Committee. I very much hope that it may be passed at this time."

Senator Langer (R-ND): "I do not quite understand the amendment which is proposed to the bill. Will the Senator explain it a little more fully?"

Senator Douglas: "Yes. In its original form, the bill provided that the Commandant of the Marine Corps was to be a full-fledged member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. As amended, he is not to be a full-fledged member, but a consultant member, and when matters affecting the Marine Corps come up, if he disagrees with the decision, he is to be privileged to have direct communication with the Secretary of the Navy and the President."

The Presiding Officer: "Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?"

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Armed Services with amendments.

The amendment was agreed to. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to fix the personnel strength of the U. S. Marine Corps, and to establish the relationship of the Commandant of the Marine Corps to the Joint Chiefs of Staff."

Col. John R. Hardin, Great Lakes Division Engineer at Chicago, and Col. John S. Seybold, South Pacific Division Engineer at San Francisco, have been ordered to duty in the Office of the Chief of Engineers, Washington, D. C. It is announced by Maj. Gen. Lewis A. Pick, Chief of Engineers.

Colonel Hardin will be succeeded in Chicago by Col. Wendell P. Trower, now Chief of the Corps of Engineers' Chicago Procurement Office.

Colonel Seybold will be succeeded in San Francisco by Col. Donald S. Burns, now District Engineer at Portland, Oregon.

Coast Guard Memorial

A heroic-sized figure of a Coast Guardsman is being modelled by Seaman William McCauley of Third Coast Guard District Headquarters. It is one of four sculptures which will buttress the block-long "Wall of the Missing" in the World War II Memorial at the American Military Cemetery, Cambridge, England.

Fifteen such memorial chapels are being erected by the American Battle Monuments Commission at military cemeteries overseas.

The other figures, of a sailor, a soldier, and an Air Force crewman, are similarly in progress at the New York studio of sculptor Wheeler Williams. These preliminary studies, now in plastelina at one-half full size, will stand eight feet, four inches when completed, and will be cut in English Portland stone.

The "Wall of the Missing" overlooks the graves of American Servicemen. On it will be carved the names of the six thousand Army, Navy, Air Force and Coast Guard personnel missing in action from operations out of England and at sea.
